GENERAL REPORT
OF THE
INTERNAL REVENUE SERVICE ADVISORY COUNCIL

The primary purpose of the Internal Revenue Service Council (IRSAC) is to provide an organized public forum for IRS officials and the representatives of the public to discuss relevant tax administration issues. The council advises the Service on issues that have substantive impact on the administration of federal tax law. Suggestions are made regarding improvements to operations as well as critiquing current and proposed programs, procedures and policies. The Council is a place where the IRS executives may bring their concerns to a select group of tax professionals from the private sector seeking input to the solution of critical issues of tax administration.

The current Council continues to reflect a group of well-suited individuals for this task. With twenty-two members spread across the spectrum of tax practitioners, tax attorneys, corporate tax counsels, providers of special services to taxpayers as well as tax professionals, small business owners and service providers, it is difficult, if not impossible, to find an area not covered by these members. When you review their individual accomplishments professionally you are assured of a conscientious and professional effort for the task at hand.

From this core group of individuals three subgroups are created which correspond to three of the IRS Operating Divisions. They are: the Small Business and Self-Employed Subgroup (SBSE); the Wage and Investment Subgroup (W&I); and, the Large and Mid-Size Business Subgroup (LMSB). The Council and these subgroups met in Washington, DC at the headquarters of the IRS. These meetings were held in January, May, July and September. During this time their respective issues were developed, researched and reported upon in the following pages. Each of these meetings consisted of two days. One day was devoted to the subgroup working session and one day was devoted to a general session where all attended and heard reports from various executives on topics of interest to all. During the subgroup sessions various individuals from the respective operating division presented reports on the issues chosen. Often conference calls were required in researching the issue between subgroup meetings.

The members of the IRSAC wish to extend their thanks and appreciation to those representatives of the operating divisions who participated in this year's efforts. The subgroups were ably assisted in their efforts by support staff of the Office of National Public Liaison. These devoted staff members, whose knowledge of the operating divisions was most helpful, made the subgroup's effort much easier. They provided all of the resources required to complete the task.

On February 1, 2005 the IRSAC was invited to testify before the IRS Oversight Board. Three areas of concern were highlighted in that testimony. First, concern was expressed over the lack of effective oversight, control and regulation of the entire tax preparation community. Circular 230 effectively deals with Enrolled Agents, Attorneys, CPAs and Enrolled Actuaries. However, there is a large body of people providing preparation services who have none of the above credentials. These people fall outside the jurisdiction of Circular 230. The Department of Justice is left to be the enforcer of the law for these preparers. They are bound by no ethical standards or rules of professional conduct and, in some cases, have no education in the field of endeavor prior to entry.

The general public has the perception that the preparation of tax returns is a regulated and licensed profession. With this comes the expectation of educational accomplishment, ethical standards, and rules of professional conduct, oversight and control. Since well over 50% of returns are prepared by paid preparers it is past the time for this myth to become reality. The IRSAC endorses the registration of those not covered by Circular 230 and at the same time accept that debate exists as to the exact method of implementation. Incorrect or underreporting of income, as revealed by the tax gap, would be improved by this change.

Second, the Offer in Compromise program is another area of concern. There have been improvements to the alleviation of the backlog in processing. It is not certain whether this is real or artificial. The centralization of effort has certainly helped in this process. The assessment of an application fee to help stem the filing of frivolous Offers has achieved results. But it does not necessarily prove that the downturn is in what would have been frivolous applications. The program is for those who are unable to pay, not for those who simply do not want to pay. Those administering the program come from a collection background and perhaps would be well served if more training were provided in the art of compromise as the title of the program indicates.

Third, IRSAC is concerned that with modernization and centralization, the Service needs to be careful to not go so far that the taxpayers who interact with the Service become befuddled by it. The need for access to a real, live person is still a very important issue.

Fourth, IRSAC continues to be concerned about the loss of seasoned Service professionals due to retirement, reassignment and transfers out of the Service, coupled with budget restraints imposed. This combination of events poses a real concern for the operational efficiency of the enforcement area of the Service as well as the ability to compensate other existing personnel. In order to carry out the enforcement initiative an additional 4,100 enforcement personnel have been projected. Commissioner Everson has discussed this in detail in a letter to Senator Baucus. In order to appropriately carry out the above and other strategic initiatives full funding is required.

The IRSAC was asked to review the modeling criteria developed by the Service to be applied in recommending closure of Taxpayer Assistance Centers. This was accomplished on short notice. Budgetary concerns prompted this study and ultimate recommendation in order to realize cost savings by eliminating underutilized centers.

Each Subgroup is requested to concentrate on specific issues relevant to the operating divisions represented and requested by them. The subgroups have direct interaction with top-level executives in receiving reports, exploring issues and developing insight to the issues of concern so that advice and commentary may be offered. It is in this way that the IRSAC is most helpful to the Service in providing the public perception.

The IRSAC, as a council of the whole, met on the second day of the meetings, as reflected above. During this time reports were presented that transcended the interest of specific subgroups. We were fortunate to hear from a wide range of individuals. Some of these were:

- Nina Olson, Taxpayer Advocate
- Michael Chesman, Director, Office of Taxpayer Burden Reduction
- Lisa McLane, Project Manager, Office of Taxpayer Burden Reduction
- Rebecca Mack Johnson, Project Director, Filing & Payment Compliance
- Russell Geiman, Acting Director NRP
- Mark Mazur, Director, Research Analysis & Statistics
- Brinton Warren, Special Counsel Procedures & Administration
- Robert Brown, Program Manager, National research Program
- Beth Tucker, Director, Communications and Liaison Disclosure

Our thanks to these and others who took the time to prepare and present their special concerns. The candor that they exhibited and their willingness to disclose, in detail, these important issues was well received.

Conclusion

The IRSAC has completed the task it set before itself at the beginning of the year. Each of us appreciates the opportunity afforded us in serving the Service and the general public. Commissioner Everson, the Operating Division Commissioners and the other IRS personnel who facilitated the efforts of the IRSAC are greatly appreciated. We look forward to seeing the impact of this council's efforts and will continue to track the implementation of its recommendations and those of predecessor councils. The real work of this council lies with the subgroups.

I. INTRODUCTION

The members of the Wage and Investment Subgroup (W&I Subgroup) of the Internal Revenue Service Advisory Council appreciate the opportunity to interact with the Internal Revenue Service to improve communication and compliance with the taxpaying public. In addition, the members applaud the Service for the time and cooperation of the W&I Division representatives and management with whom we have met to discuss and resolve issues. We look forward to our continued involvement with the W&I Division of the Service in order to create a winning situation for the Internal Revenue Service, practitioner community and the taxpayers.

Our report addresses issues identified by the Commissioner of Wage and Investment, as well as those identified by the W&I Subgroup.

II. ISSUES AND RECOMMENDATIONS

1. REDESIGNED NOTICES AND POSTAGE REDUCTION

The Internal Revenue Service (IRS) has embarked on an important initiative to make notices clearer and taxpayer-friendly. We support IRS's endeavor for it is long overdue. In reviewing several redesigned notices, we have three suggestions:

1. We recommend essential information specific to the taxpayer's refund or balance due that could result from the proposed changes of the notice be stated on the front page. Often pertinent information is buried in the back of the notice.
2. We recommend that notices include reference to the availability of taxpayer assistance.

For example,

In responding to this notice, you can seek assistance from:

- a. a qualified tax professional,
- b. an IRS Taxpayer Assistance Center, or,
- c. a low income tax clinic, if you qualify.

Obtain information about where to find IRS centers or tax clinics at www.irs.gov or 1-800-829-1040.

3. We recommend IRS replace the wording “Your return is done incorrectly, or, You have errors on your return” with a comment such as, “There are inconsistencies in your tax return” or “In your tax return are the following differences. We need your help to resolve these differences.”

With respect to the postage reduction initiative, we recommend that the IRS:

- a. Discontinue the Form 940 mail-out.
- b. Reduce the number of pages in notices by replacing the frequently asked questions and instead replace with a reference to the IRS website www.irs.gov, or to 1-800-829-4477, topic 652.

We applaud IRS for redesigning these notices and cutting postage waste by discontinuing many unused taxpayer and practitioner forms, booklets, etc. We encourage IRS to continue redesigning notices.

2. NEXT GENERATION E-SERVICES

E-Services were developed to enable the tax professionals and payers to communicate electronically with the IRS. These services were intended to make it easier for tax professionals to communicate with the IRS and obtain information to help their clients.

The history of e-Service product availability is as follows:

October 2003:

- E-Services Registration,
- Preparer Tax Identification Number (PTIN) applications,
- E-file applications (form download only)
- Interactive Taxpayer Identification Number (TIN) matching.

Year 2004:

- E-file applications include electronic submission for practitioners

The ability to match bulk submissions of TINs.

Incentive launched for those who e-filed 100 or more individual returns

Disclosure Authorization (DA) forms,

Electronic Account Resolution (EAR), and

The Transcript Delivery System (TDS).

Year 2005:

Reduced the incentive threshold to five or more accepted tax returns in a calendar year.

Updated E-Services Next Generation top ten priorities, elevating the priority of expanding e-Services to Reporting Agents and EITC e-Services. These proposed services, however, are not expected to be funded prior to FY 07. In the interim, the W&I Division is establishing a team to define the business requirements and build a business case for funding justification.

Recommendations

1. We recommend that funding be provided for inclusion of Reporting Agents e-services in the FY 06 budget.
2. E-Services should be available to all Circular 230 professionals without regard to the number of electronically filed returns. This would allow those practitioners who do representation only the ability to obtain information and resolve cases more expeditiously.

3. AUTOMATED UNDER REPORTING (AUR) SYSTEM

The Automated Under Reporting (AUR) System Scripts used in answering the AUR telephone call in system should be user friendly and give the taxpayer sufficient information to assist in resolving problems as quickly as possible.

The Internal Revenue Service Advisory Council W&I Subgroup thanks the IRS personnel that engaged in writing the telephone scripts for the Automated Under Reporting (AUR) System. We recognize that a lot of effort went into the original writing and even more effort into the evaluation and subsequent changes. During its review, the Subgroup found the flow of the scripts to be logical. However, we noted during the review that no mention is made of representation by a third party.

Recommendations:

1. The taxpayer should be immediately informed that they are entitled to representation by a qualified tax professional. Some of the taxpayers who are dealing with the AUR are uneducated as to tax laws and the right to have representation. This will assist the taxpayer and the Service by getting issues resolved sooner and lowering the inventory of unresolved cases.
2. In order to make the system more user-friendly, we recommend early in the script a statement of the estimated wait time for an assistor. We realize this recommendation may take some time to implement since an investment in additional equipment and software will be needed.
3. The caller should be allowed to drop out of the script and leave a message for a call back. The scripts should list all of the information that the taxpayer must provide, including best time to be contacted.

4. IDENTITY THEFT

According to a recent report to Treasury Inspector General for Tax Administration (TIGTA), the IRS currently has no corporate strategy to combat identity theft. The cost for the victims of identity theft is estimated at approximately $5 billion and almost 300 million hours a year trying to restore their good names.

Other government agencies have implemented ways to help victims of identity theft. The Federal Trade Commission (FTC) has developed a Complaint Input Form and acts as a clearinghouse for complaints of victims. The Social Security Administration (SSA) provides an ID Thief Affidavit on their website to be completed and sent to each creditor. The SSA can issue a new number in extreme circumstances with some restrictions.

In addition, federal and state criminal statutes may apply to data collection, use, disclosure, and notification to consumers.

Recommendations:

1. Develop policies and procedures that assure IRS compliance with existing regulatory and legal frameworks
2. Disseminate this information to the practitioner community through annual tax forums, Tax Talk Today, and tax season advertising
3. Assign a new reject code to show that an attempt at filing has already been made. This would alert the preparer to take extra steps in due diligence.
4. Because of the accelerated growth of identity theft and the scope of the issue, IRS should accelerate its modernization plan to put into place additional safeguards to protect taxpayers.

5. STRENGTHENING EITC COMPLIANCE AND OUTREACH

For the last 30 years, the Earned Income Tax Credit has been a valuable tool in reducing poverty in America, earning bi-partisan support. Today, it delivers $38 billion to 22 million workers and their families who have low earnings every year.

Improving compliance and participation would make the EITC even more effective. Compliance is a challenge because the EITC is among the most complex parts of the tax code, and taxpayers as well as tax practitioners have difficulty interpreting and meeting its requirements. Participation is relatively strong, yet studies show that approximately 15-25% of eligible individuals do not claim the credit and some taxpayers, whose claims are denied, are, in fact, eligible.

Recommendations:

1. Balanced Enforcement: Compared to other areas of tax noncompliance, EITC has been singled out for disproportionate emphasis as compared to other areas of tax noncompliance (48% of the million returns audited in FY04 involved an EITC, suggesting a disproportionate emphasis). We urge the IRS to maintain balanced enforcement. Taxpayers pre-filing and filing assistance programs can play a larger and more cost-effective role in improving compliance, as can cooperation with qualified tax practitioners.

2. Improved IRS Procedures: The IRS can contribute to EITC simplification with clearer forms schedules, instructions, and notices. EITC examination and recertification procedures should be improved, including greater efforts to make contact with taxpayers to ensure that qualified claimants are not denied the credit.
3. Certification Burden Reduction: The pilot Certification Program imposes a substantial hardship on taxpayers. Extra effort is needed to minimize the burden by clarifying notices and letters so that both taxpayers and tax practitioners can better understand and comply.
4. Improved Preparer Training: The IRS should partner with tax professional groups to develop an interactive training module aimed at improving EITC compliance that could be used by professional and volunteer preparers. It should strengthen its program of oversight visits to EITC preparers and strengthen training for volunteer preparers.
5. Revitalized IRS Outreach: The IRS should strengthen its outreach program by working with community groups, employers, and tax practitioners to ensure that all qualified taxpayers receive the EITC. In addition, IRS should:
  - a. Expand the use of the excellent EITC outreach television advertising.
  - b. Target outreach efforts to hard-to-reach groups, including non-English-speaking taxpayers for whom foreign language media may be most effective. Additional research to better target those eligible but not receiving the EITC is needed.
  - c. Provide educational materials to describe program changes.

6. IMPROVING VITA QUALITY

Volunteer income tax assistance programs contribute significantly to the IRS mission and to serving the needs of low-income taxpayers. As with any seasonal program staffed by volunteers using temporary locations and with limited resources, issues of organization, training, participation, and quality can arise.

Several initiatives, some underway, could strengthen the VITA program:

1. Role of IRS and Partners: Volunteer program leaders and participants have expressed concern with IRS program administration and its emphases. The IRS and volunteer leaders agree that an improved program requires:
  - a. Better training and software,
  - b. Funds for more computers, printers and copiers, and
  - c. Tools for volunteer management and leadership training and development.

We urge the IRS to provide sufficient resources including performance-based grants to ensure the program can meet needs and produce high quality results.

2. Training Improvements: Many VITA volunteers have only limited training and work at sites that may be open only a few hours weekly, often with inadequate tools. We recommend that training be strengthened through:
  - i. Development of a uniform curriculum that can be delivered in an interactive online version. The curriculum should include complex case examples and state tax law.
  - ii. More cooperation with foundations, community groups, schools, and tax professionals in developing training resources.
  - iii. A tax training campus for an intensive train-the-trainer program.
  - iv. Scholarships to enable volunteer leaders to attend tax-training courses.
  - v. Work with community colleges to integrate tax training into their programs. The goal is to expand the pool of qualified volunteers.
  - vi. Software improvements including interview-based screening tools.

I. INTRODUCTION

The IRSAC Small Business/Self-Employed Subgroup (hereafter “SB/SE Subgroup”) consists of a diverse group of tax professionals who have significant professional experience and organizational affiliations. The SB/SE Subgroup has representation from CPAs, Enrolled Agents, Tax Attorneys and Software Developers. Each member, along with specific areas of expertise, has wide experience with both the taxpaying public and the Internal Revenue Service (IRS). We are pleased that the IRS has requested our views on issues of importance to both the general public and the IRS.

The SB/SE Subgroup thanks the IRS for providing us the opportunity to attend the IRS Nationwide Tax Forum of our choice. We believe that this is an important interaction between the IRSAC members, tax professionals and IRS personnel and would like to see the practice continued.

During the past year, the SB/SE Subgroup has met for four working sessions in Washington, D.C. We want to thank the IRS personnel with whom we have had discussions for their availability and candor. The SB/SE Subgroup has focused its attention on five issues as summarized below:

1. Employment Tax Pyramiding - Employment tax pyramiding is a serious problem. It continues despite significant efforts by the IRS to curb it. As listed in our recommendations, there are a number of steps that could be taken to eliminate pyramiding.
2. Enhancing Communication with Tax Practitioners - Given scarce resources, the IRS should place more emphasis on cooperation with tax professionals to encourage taxpayer compliance. This can be done more efficiently through enhanced communication and relationships.

3. E-services for Reporting Agents - E-services have not been provided to Reporting Agents, a significant IRS partner, even though they have been available to others since 2003. Providing e-services to Reporting Agents is a good business decision and should be undertaken immediately for the benefit of IRS, Reporting Agents, and Taxpayers.
4. Tax Professional Best Practices - The IRS wishes to improve the quality of practice of tax professionals, as evidenced by the amendment to the Circular 230 Regulations concerning practice before the IRS. The IRS can improve best practices of tax professionals by providing additional guidance, providing more clearly defined expectations, and improving its working relationship with the tax professional community.
5. Underreported Income - Underreported income is the largest contributor to the tax gap. Improving compliance requires both a carrot and a stick. We recommend additional taxpayer and preparer education, facilitation and improved use of third-party reporting, and increased contact between the IRS and a broad spectrum of taxpayers.

For each issue, we have provided recommendations. Some are easily implemented; others might take an “Act of Congress.” In addition, some recommendations may have significant impact beyond the specific issues that they address. Nonetheless, regardless of the level of complexity, we felt that each recommendation deserved to be documented and considered. We are hopeful that each will generate meaningful dialog within the IRS.

II. ISSUES AND RECOMMENDATIONS

ISSUE ONE: Employment Tax Pyramiding

Executive Summary

Employment tax pyramiding is a serious problem. It continues despite significant efforts by the IRS to curb it. As listed in our recommendations, there are a number of steps that could be taken to eliminate pyramiding.

Background

The IRS requested the input of the SB/SE Subgroup with respect to education, prevention, detection, intervention and enforcement in the context of the “pyramiding” of unpaid employment tax assessments. “Tax Pyramiding” is defined by the IRS as the accumulation of more than one quarter of unpaid employment taxes for the same business. It has also been defined to include the “musical corporation” fact pattern where a business has an outstanding employment tax liability; closes down; and, then, the same business starts up again within a new entity and with a new employer identification number.

The IRS has already initiated significant changes to address tax pyramiding. The changes are in definitions, statistical analysis, managerial communication, management - Revenue Officer communication, Revenue Officer training, monitoring criteria including FTD Alert selection criteria, and consumer alerts. However, despite these efforts, tax pyramiding continues to increase.

Recommendations

1. Partner with the Department of Education, "Office of Innovation and Improvement," for the purpose of developing a Tax Education Module to become part of the core curriculum for all high school students.
2. Introduce a single, semiweekly deposit frequency for all 941/943 depositors to encourage quick payment of employment tax liabilities. In view of this recommendation, it should be determined whether the policy and reasoning underlying the new Form 944 are consistent with the actions which need to be taken to eliminate pyramiding.

3. Change the signature line on the Form SS-4 to indicate that the individual signing the form is, by his or her signature, agreeing that he or she is a "Responsible Person" within the meaning of that term under Section 6672 of the Internal Revenue Code for the purpose of the Trust Fund Recovery Penalty. Provide a space next to or under the signature line for that individual's Social Security number. Implement programming to ensure that the signer's Social Security Number is linked with the Employer I.D. number issued.
4. Implement better data mining and action from the answers to the question on the current Form SS-4 which asks: "Has the applicant ever applied for an employer identification number for this or any other business?"
5. Consider adding the following questions to the SS-4: "Do any of the control individuals for this business have any personal outstanding tax liabilities to the Internal Revenue Service? Do any other corporations, which name any of these control individuals as a "Responsible Person," have any outstanding tax liabilities? If so, please state the name, Social Security number, address and telephone number of each such individual."
6. More closely monitor payment coupons and/or electronic filing for small businesses. In this connection, lower the threshold of the FTD alert program to cover smaller payrolls; cause notices to be sent out earlier; and cause telephone contact to occur sooner.
7. Increase the use of Form Letter 903 concerning failure to deposit employment taxes, Notice 931 entitled "Deposit Requirements for Employment Taxes," and Form 2481 entitled "Notice to Make Special Deposits of Taxes" together with the Certificate of Delivery of Form 2481. Furthermore, an increase in enforcement of violations of the terms of the Form 2481, and other applicable criminal offenses that might apply in this context, should be implemented by partnering with the Justice Department, Tax Division, Criminal Section to develop an enforcement program that includes a series of prosecutions that includes smaller employers. Publicize the compliance initiative on the website, through push email and press releases.

8. Partner with representatives of the various practitioner groups to develop a core set of CPE/CLE materials on tax pyramiding that can be used to make presentations to and by practitioners.
9. Use the current push email capability and the IRS website to send out a warning to practitioners concerning tax pyramiding.
10. Amend the Circular 230 Regulations to include a specific example showing that it is not proper for an individual to aid and abet a tax pyramider.
11. Partner with the Department of Justice, Tax Division, Criminal Section to develop an enforcement initiative that targets professionals that aid and abet tax pyramiding. Publicize the formation of the partnership.
12. Coordinate more closely with agencies such as the Small Business Administration, State Workers' Compensation Boards, and the various Departments of Revenue of the 50 states in order to facilitate early detection of tax pyramiders.
13. Partner with the National Payroll Reporting Consortium to develop a bonding requirement for reporting agents. Currently there is no such requirement. When a reporting agent fails to remit the paid in withheld funds to the IRS, a series of procedural difficulties occur. A bonding requirement for the reporting agents would go a long way toward eliminating those difficulties.

14. Increase the training of Revenue Officers with respect to their understanding and use of transferee liability procedures. While subsection 6334(a)(13) provides for an exemption from levy in certain circumstances if the amount of the levy does not exceed $5,000, it does not prohibit utilizing the transferee liability provisions, Section 6901 et seq, to pursue the assessment against a new, successor entity which may, in essence, be the same business. Use of the transferee liability procedures would be particularly helpful in the context of “the musical corporation” scenario.
15. Revisit the criteria, and increase Revenue Officer training, for applying the status: Code 53 ("Currently Not Collectable") to an employer where tax pyramiding is present.
16. Include bold warnings in Publication 15, “(Circular E), Employer’s Tax Guide,” showing the civil and criminal consequences of negligently and/or willfully violating laws pertaining to employment taxes.

ISSUE TWO: Enhancing Communication with Tax Practitioners

Executive Summary

Given scarce resources, the IRS should place more emphasis on cooperation with tax professionals to encourage taxpayer compliance. This can be done more efficiently through enhanced communication and relationships.

Background

The tax practitioner can be a valuable ally to the IRS in the effort to enhance compliance. Tax practitioners encourage their clients to comply with IRS rules and regulations and help a taxpayer come back into compliance after the IRS has discovered a discrepancy. Tax practitioners, however, need the help and guidance of the IRS to assist their clients.

Recommendations

1. The IRS should return more personnel and authority to the field offices. Tax practitioners are frustrated by the inability of local IRS personnel to resolve issues and want local IRS personnel that have authority to make decisions. The concept of “remote management,” whereby a manager in Dallas manages an office in Colorado, frustrates tax practitioners who do not have direct access to IRS personnel with the ability to resolve issues. Many issues could be resolved more quickly and efficiently through face-to-face meetings and pre-existing relationships between the IRS and tax practitioners. A return to regions and districts could provide more authority to local IRS personnel, enhance timely communication, and decrease the cost of repeat paper notices that generally do not bring about a resolution.
2. When planning internal changes, particularly those that involve renaming IRS functions, the IRS needs to be more sensitive to the impact any such changes might have on the efficiency of IRS/practitioner communication.
3. Currently, certain IRS field offices provide local tax practitioners with a list of names and telephone numbers of key IRS personnel in their particular area. This is a valuable tool to increase communication between tax practitioners and the IRS. A uniform program should be created to ensure that all IRS field offices provide this information to tax practitioners. The information could be provided to the local industry groups twice a year for dissemination to tax practitioners.
4. The IRS Nationwide Tax Forums are informative, but do not provide the practitioner with an opportunity to meet people from the local IRS office. Tax practitioners want to build personal relationships with the local IRS personnel. Practitioners want to know whom to call locally in collections, exam, etc. in order to get an issue resolved. The practitioners want to work with someone who has an interest in, and understands, the community. To build these relationships, the IRS should have annual or semi-annual “meet the IRS” meetings with the tax practitioner community. These meetings could provide updates to the local practitioner community and provide the practitioners with access to real people within the IRS. These meetings should be open to all practitioners and advertised to all members of local enrolled agent, CPA and bar associations. Currently, the formal IRS meetings with tax practitioners are limited to certain committee members of the local associations hosting the event.

5. The IRS should send local tax practitioner groups a list of available IRS speakers and the subject each can speak on. The list should include a contact name and telephone number to arrange for a speaker. With the bigger groups, e.g. state Bar Tax Sections and state Institutes of Certified Public Accountants, the IRS should appoint liaisons to each group. The scope and activities of the liaison would have to be explored subject to the usual concerns of time, budget, National Treasury Employees Union rules, etc. This type of outreach would provide strong evidence of the IRS’ willingness to partner with tax practitioners.
6. Subject to Section 6103 concerns, Form 2848 should be revised to permit a taxpayer to approve e-mail communication between the IRS and the taxpayer’s representative.
7. Training should be improved to ensure that IRS personnel have a more technical understanding of tax law and the IRS structure. IRS personnel should be provided timely updates on changes in the tax law, IRS forms and notices. IRS call centers should be provided access to a database which contains contact information for IRS personnel, including industry specialists, to whom the call centers could refer a tax practitioner for more technical guidance.

8. IRS exam personnel should better utilize IRS personnel with industry specific knowledge and information, especially during the exam process. The IRS has expertise through Market Segment Specialization Papers (MSSP) and Industry Specialization Papers (ISP), which are being underutilized.
9. Tax Talk Today is an excellent program, but not enough tax practitioners are aware of it. The IRS should adjust the marketing strategy to include advertisements in trade publications and an emphasis on the fact that Tax Talk Today is hosted by the IRS. If logistically feasible, Tax Talk Today should be the launching pad for major IRS announcements, so that it becomes a significant source of information for practitioners.
10. The current IRS listservs should be streamlined to provide participants with updated information in a more concise format. For example, currently a tax practitioner that subscribes to the IRS listserv for various states receives e-mails, that often contain repetitive information, for each state. These various e-mails could be combined into one e-mail that contains links to each state specific tax update. Similarly, the IRS could send an e-mail with links to recent federal tax updates. These links could be categorized by practice area (e.g. non-profits, pass-through entities, etc.) to afford easy access.

ISSUE THREE: E-services for Reporting Agents

Executive Summary

E-services have not been provided to Reporting Agents, a significant IRS partner, even though they have been available to others since 2003. Providing e-services to Reporting Agents is a good business decision and should be undertaken immediately for the benefit of IRS, Reporting Agents, and Taxpayers.

Background

Reporting Agents do not have the benefit of utilizing those e-services that individual tax practitioners have had since October 2003. Since their roll out, e-services have been made more useful to individual tax practitioners through expanded offerings (Transcript Delivery Service, Electronic Account Resolution, and Disclosure Authorization) and more widely available through a lowering of the entry level threshold from 100 e-filed individual returns to 5 e-filed returns - either individual, business, or a combination of both.

Nevertheless, despite this broadening of accessibility to e-services, the IRS has not yet provided e-services to an important IRS partner – Reporting Agents (RAs). There are currently over 3,300 registered RAs who provide payroll and tax services to more than 1.9 million employers and more than one-third of the nation’s private sector workforce. RAs transmit over 30 percent of all depository taxes received by the U.S. Treasury. The success of the EFTPS and employment tax e-filing initiatives is largely due to the cooperation of RAs, who make all federal tax payments via EFTPS and submit all employment tax returns electronically.

For FY2005, a request for e-services funding was prepared by IRS personnel. The funding request estimated the development cost of e-services to RAs (at an equivalent level to those offered to individual practitioners) at $1.5 - $2 million. Based on recent conversations with IRS personnel, even this amount may be more than is needed. Yet, IRS states that e-services for RAs cannot receive approved funding prior to FY2007 – at the earliest. This is too long to wait for a program that would be of such benefit to all stakeholders. It should be noted that the IRS budget request for Business Systems Modernization (BSM) funding in FY2006 was $199 million – $4 million less than the FY2005 appropriation of $203 million. The cost to implement e-services for RAs is less than half the decrease in BSM funds that IRS has requested from 2005 to 2006. In other words, if BSM were simply funded at the same level as in FY2005, there would be more than enough money to implement e-services for RAs.

Recommendations

1. Fund e-services for RAs immediately and by whatever means available – including the possibility of incremental funding. There are several reasons for not waiting:
  - a) There is strong financial justification to provide e-services for RAs. Currently, RAs use the Toll-Free Practitioner Priority Services (PPS) to resolve most issues. RAs estimate that, as a result of notices, they make more than 300,000 calls to PPS annually and that 30% of these calls could be eliminated if Transcript Delivery Services were available. Therefore, the implementation of just Transcript Delivery Services, without regard to other enhancements that could be easily made available, would eliminate 90,000 telephone calls annually. If each of these calls were conservatively estimated at 15 minutes each, that would be a savings of over 11 FTE or nearly $800,000 per year – approximately one half the development cost in personnel savings in the first year alone. In addition, there would be other cost savings such as the printing and mailing costs of transcripts. Admittedly, there will be new costs associated with e-services, but we believe, given the e-services infrastructure already in place, that these costs will be minimal.
  - b) Maintain the goodwill and cooperation of RAs by rewarding them for their help in maintaining tax compliance. RAs originate over 95% of all electronically filed employment tax returns, and, by IRS measures, their clients are 20 times more compliant than the general population.
  - c) E-services for RAs will be easy to implement and quickly accepted. Analysis and prototyping have already been done, development cost is reasonable, and RAs are a highly computer-literate community that has been requesting e-services for years. Therefore, e-services would be used immediately for the benefit of both the IRS and taxpayers.

- d) Because there is already a communication avenue between IRS and RAs, marketing and startup costs would be negligible.
  - e) E-services for RAs would lead to paperwork burden reduction for both IRS and RAs, since transcripts and other correspondence could be delivered via the internet.
2. Complete the current development phase. In cooperation with the National Payroll Reporting Consortium (NPRC), an organization representing RAs, IRS personnel have been developing requirements and prototypes, tailored to the needs of RAs, for Transcript Delivery Services and Electronic Account Resolution. The requirements stage of the development process is nearing completion, and IRS should:
- a) allow and encourage these tasks to be completed.
  - b) provide an avenue to continue with the design and development of RA e-services products.
3. Consider development of RA e-services by in-house personnel. The expertise exists in-house to develop e-services. The advantage to implementing in-house is two-fold:
- a) In-house development would further enhance web-based systems development expertise within the IRS.
  - b) In-house development would provide IRS personnel, who have been working on existing legacy systems, a career path into more modern systems technology without leaving IRS for the private sector.

4. Partner with RAs to identify other e-service products that would reduce IRS costs, e.g. ability to verify RA authorization, entity (EIN, name) verification, taxpayer deposit frequency lookup, and electronic notice delivery. All of these pre- and post-filing applications will drive further IRS cost reductions by eliminating much telephone and mail interaction between RAs and IRS. Furthermore, the pre-filing applications would allow verification of taxpayer information before making payments and filing returns, thus reducing mistakes and preventing notices before they occur. Just to call out one of these items, electronic notice delivery (by eliminating mailing costs to RAs and by providing early receipt, faster resolution and reduction in subsequent notices) has the potential to save the IRS over $1.2 million annually in direct costs associated with notice delivery.

ISSUE FOUR: Tax Professional Best Practices

Executive Summary

The IRS wishes to improve the quality of practice of tax professionals, as evidenced by the amendment to the Circular 230 Regulations concerning practice before the IRS. The IRS can improve best practices of tax professionals by providing additional guidance, providing more clearly defined expectations, and improving its working relationship with the tax professional community.

Background

The Internal Revenue Service has requested the SB/SE Subgroup to provide recommendations regarding how the IRS can improve the quality of practice of tax professionals. Since this is such a large issue, we have chosen, in this report, to focus primarily on tax professionals subject to Circular 230 Regulations. The IRS request to investigate the improvement of tax professional standards is consistent with the amendment to the Circular 230 Regulations, effective June 30, 2005, which include in Section 10.33 aspirational “best practices for tax advisors.” Tax advisors are urged to provide clients with the highest quality representation concerning Federal tax issues by adhering to best practices in providing advice and in preparing submissions to the IRS.

Section 10.33 provides that best practices include:

1. Communicating clearly with the client regarding the terms of the engagement.
2. Establishing the facts by determining which are relevant facts, evaluating reasonableness of assumptions or representations, relating applicable law and arriving at conclusions supported by the law and facts.
3. Advising the client regarding the import of conclusions.
4. Acting fairly and with integrity in practice before the IRS.

Under Section 10.33(b), tax professionals with oversight of a firm's practice must take reasonable steps to ensure members employ "best practices" consistently.

Recommendations

1. Additional guidance and clarification concerning the scope of "best practices" and Circular 230 would be helpful to tax practitioners.
2. The IRS must work closely with the tax practitioner community in developing examples and guidance to address such issues as balancing the practical compliance burden on the practitioner, while enhancing public confidence in the tax system, and promoting with integrity and honesty. Timeliness of this guidance is vital to increase compliance and reduce confusion, already evident in the tax practitioner community, related to these new requirements.
3. The IRS must work with the tax professional community to more clearly define the line between "tax avoidance or evasion" and "tax advice and planning." In an effort to achieve this goal, we recommend the IRS implement the following:

- a) Establish a toll free hotline to receive complaints and answer questions concerning ethical and unethical behavior by tax professionals.
  - b) Establish an ethics ruling request procedure, preferably within the Office of Professional Responsibility (OPR).
  - c) Expand, update and supplement the FAQ section of the OPR web page with questions and answers obtained from sources such as email submissions, the toll free ethics hotline, and the ethics ruling process (i.e. allow ethics questions to be asked and answered via email request as long as no section 6103 privacy issues are involved).

Once the foregoing is established, also include an ethics search engine on the OPR web page.
4. Work with the American Institute of Certified Public Accountants (AICPA), the American Bar Association (ABA), the National Association of Enrolled Agents (NAEA) and other similar tax professional groups in the development of tax practice standards.
  5. The current relationship between the IRS and the tax professional community must become less “adversarial” and more “cooperative.” Programs implemented by the IRS, such as the Tax Professional Forums and advisory committees, are important steps to improving the relationship, but the public as a whole still has an “us vs. them” perception of the IRS. Although we realize that the IRS has heard this recommendation many times and in various forms, we feel that it is worth repeating. The IRS must continue to strengthen the relationship with the tax professional community in developing tax policies and procedures. A joint effort in the development and dissemination of the “purpose,” “benefit,” and “procedures requirements” for actions taken by the IRS is essential to facilitate “buy-in” by the tax professional community and the general public as a whole.

ISSUE FIVE: Underreported Income

Executive Summary

Underreported income is the largest contributor to the tax gap. Improving compliance requires both a carrot and a stick. We recommend additional taxpayer and preparer education, facilitation and improved use of third-party reporting, and increased contact between the IRS and a broad spectrum of taxpayers.

Background

The IRS and its overseers have devoted much attention to the “tax gap,” the estimated shortfall between what the IRS collects from taxpayers annually and the amount taxpayers actually owe. A National Research Program study of individual income tax returns, completed in December 2004, estimated the gross gap at over $300 billion a year. Of this amount, approximately 80% is believed to be attributable to underreported income.

Income reporting compliance is highest in the areas in which there is third party reporting and/or withholding at the source: wages, interest, and dividends. Reporting of net business income and associated employment taxes by small businesses and self-employed individuals is significantly less accurate, despite the fact that a large proportion of these entities utilize professional tax preparers.

Some underreporting occurs as a result of the complexity of the tax system. Taxpayers do not understand their responsibilities or do not allocate time and energy to comply. Other underreporting represents more deliberate tax avoidance.

The SB/SE Operating Division asked IRSAC’s SB/SE Subgroup to consider (1) ways to encourage taxpayers to report all income and (2) methods to detect unreported income. The phrasing of this request is worth noting because it suggests an understanding that both “carrot” and “stick” are vital to improving taxpayer compliance. We concur wholeheartedly with this philosophy.

Recommendations

1. It is important for the legislative and executive branches of government, who set tax policy and fund tax administration, to understand the nature of the tax gap. In dealing with the general public, however, excessive emphasis on the shortfall may actually encourage non-compliance the “everyone else is doing it” mentality. We would urge IRS management and communications professionals to consider their audiences, putting more emphasis on the Service’s compliance successes in dealing with the taxpaying population.
2. We believe that compliance will improve if taxpayers, and the professionals who assist them, more clearly understand their responsibilities. We recommend development of industry-specific “self audit guides,” a one or two page checklist of key issues affecting specific industries that could be mailed to taxpayers whose Schedule C/F, 1120S or 1065 contains applicable business codes. These guides would be based on, and would refer to, Audit Technique Guides developed under the IRS Market Segment Specialization Program. The guide mailed to bars and restaurants, for example, might cover tip reporting. It would briefly outline employer/employee responsibilities, provide information about median tip rates, and describe remedial actions, such as Employer Only Assessments, available to the IRS. A similar “back to the basics” guide covering issues applicable to all small business or self-employed taxpayers could also be developed.

This information should be disseminated through industry and tax professional organizations. If the taxpayer, and his preparer, know that the IRS is shining a light on certain areas, they will be more likely to pay attention to those matters.

3. Compliance with existing third party reporting requirements could be enhanced by making Form 1099-MISC more available and easier to use. Converting to a reproducible form by eliminating the requirement for red “dropout” ink would be an important first step. Developing an online interface for filers of less than ten 1099’s (similar to the interface developed by the Social Security Administration for W-2 filers) would also be helpful. Extending the deadline for filing the IRS copy of Form 1099 from February 28 to March 31 would encourage professionals (whose first glimpse at their client’s “shoebox” might not occur until the spring deadlines for filing small business and individual returns approach) to prepare any 1099’s that may have been overlooked without fear of penalty.
4. The IRS should consider replacing one of the less useful questions in the Other Information section of Form 1120S and Form 1065 with the question, “Have all required Form 1099’s been filed?” Adding this question to a form that is signed under penalty of perjury would encourage taxpayers to take their information reporting responsibilities more seriously. It would also give tax preparers a tool for encouraging recalcitrant taxpayers to report both payments and receipts.
5. Consideration should be given to eliminating the exemption for payments to corporations from 1099-MISC reporting. Choice of entity should not provide similar businesses with dissimilar opportunities for evasion. Many businesses already prepare Forms 1099 for all applicable vendors, regardless of their business structure. Elimination of the need to differentiate between corporate and non-corporate payees would be a burden reduction that would somewhat offset the burden created by having to produce additional forms.
6. The IRS could gain a valuable tool by requiring credit card processors to report aggregate credit card payments to merchants on a new Form 1099. Reporting the data by month of payment would facilitate use with respect to fiscal year taxpayers. This information is already captured by computer, and the programming needed to provide summary data to the IRS annually should be minimal. Credit card receipts would allow data-matching and enhanced audit selection criteria to be developed in industries not presently touched by 1099-MISC reporting.

7. We are somewhat reluctant to make any suggestions regarding improved or additional third-party information reporting until the IRS has the resources to utilize this data effectively. Currently, under 30% of the individual returns for which potential discrepancies are identified by the Automated Underreporter Program are selected for review. There is no systematic match of third-party information returns and Forms 1120S or 1065. We believe developing and utilizing models for testing gross receipts will be at least as productive as ensuring that K-1 data flows through to 1040's.
8. Throughout our discussions with IRS personnel, we frequently heard that review, exam, and prosecution criteria target "the big fish," the higher dollar situations in which there is likely to be more bang for the buck. While this approach is efficient on one level, we are concerned that ignoring a large number of smaller taxpayers can have a significant negative effect on compliance. The little guys should not feel they have a free pass. It is unlikely that a generally compliant taxpayer will become abusively non-compliant. Slipping from 87% compliant to 83% compliant is far more possible. A small loss of compliance across a large part of the taxpayer population may have impact comparable to egregious non-compliance in a rather small segment. Conversely, a small improvement in compliance across the broad spectrum of taxpayers can have a measurable positive effect on the tax gap. We feel strongly that random "touches" across the board will have a beneficial impact on taxpayer compliance and should be more strongly weighted in the selection criteria than they currently seem to be.

Dear Mr. Wagner:

The Internal Revenue Service Advisory Council is pleased to present our comments today as a part of your first panel on "How can the IRS leverage its external stakeholders to achieve a more highly compliant taxpayer population?"

Authorized under the Federal Advisory Committee Act, Public Law No. 92-463, the first Advisory Group to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue or the Commissioner's Advisory Group ("CAG") was established in 1953 as a "national policy and/or issue advisory committee." Renamed in 1998 to reflect the agency-wide scope of its focus as an advisory body, the IRSAC's primary purpose is to provide an organized public forum for senior IRS executives and representatives of the public to discuss relevant tax administration issues. As an advisory body designed to focus on broad policy matters, the IRSAC reviews existing tax policy and/or recommends policies with respect to emerging tax administration issues. The IRSAC suggests operational improvements, offers constructive observations regarding current or proposed IRS policies, programs, and procedures, and advises the Commissioner with respect to issues having substantive effect on federal tax administration.

Conveying the public's perception of IRS activities to the Commissioner, the IRSAC is comprised of individuals who bring substantial, disparate experience and diverse backgrounds on the Council's activities. Membership is balanced to include representation from the taxpaying public, the tax professional community, small and large businesses, state tax administration, and the payroll community.

One of the significant areas of concern that at present lends to the inability to effectively achieve voluntary tax compliance is the lack of effective oversight, control, and regulation of the entire tax preparation community. Circular 230 under which Enrolled Agents, Attorneys, CPA's and Enrolled Actuaries are regulated has been revised to address the concerns about the recent scandals in the profession. Sadly, there will always be those who choose to ignore the rules and regulations. The greater problem is that there are a significant number of tax preparers who operate under no such standards of professional conduct or entry-level educational standards or attainment of recognized credentials. They simply decide to become preparers and away they go. We have recently seen a high degree of activity from the Justice Department in prosecuting a number of these folks. This is called encouraging compliance by way of threat of prosecution. This is akin to closing the barn door after the cows have escaped.

These same individuals are relatively transparent to the outside observer since many do not sign the returns they prepare for pay. Having no initial qualifications upon entry to the field and not being required to participate in continuing education really gives them a license to steal. The public has the conception that the industry is regulated and so they are lulled into a false sense of security regarding the choosing of a paid preparer. The law being as complicated as it is simply mandates that assistance is required in order to prepare one's tax return. Best estimates say that there are, perhaps, as many as 900,000 individual preparers who are not governed by any licensing authority. The need to regulate the entire community of tax preparers is long over due, which should include the ability to remove the offenders from the preparation field. The Taxpayer Advocate has cited this need in several of her annual reports. The topic itself has bounced around for at least two decades. The proposal was a part of the Good Government bill introduced in the last Congress. Ultimate passage of this will raise the bar of competence of those preparing tax returns for pay as well as give the authorities the ability to more easily identify them.

E-services have been unveiled and initial implementation has begun. The SBSE subgroup believes that the utilization of these services by those directly involved in the field is essential. It is no less essential that it be expanded to include not only more services but also a greater array of stakeholders. We simply must embrace advancing technology more rapidly. It is the concept of spending money to make, save or collect money.

The Offer in Compromise program is still not where it should be. While improvement has occurred, the "mine field is still not negotiable." The backlog of inventoried offers may be down but the complete picture of exactly why is still unclear. Perhaps the filing fee has served to stem somewhat the influx of frivolous offers, or could it be that the taxpayer doesn't even have the $150? The rejection rate as opposed to the acceptance rate is disparate. Is this because the criteria for acceptable levels of living expenses is incorrect or is it the inability of the specialist to appropriately evaluate the offer? Is it appropriate for those administering the program to be heavily weighted from a collection background with little or no training in the art of negotiation or compromise? Good business says take what you can reasonably get, reduce your receivable and insure compliance for the next five years. In order for this program to succeed the validity of it needs to be embraced by the IRS. Once this occurs we will then see taxpayers caught outside the system returned to the system. Thus becoming part of the good guys once again. There needs to be a strengthening of the tracking system of these folks as they go forward to see that they do not stray from the path in the future. The threat of revocation of accepted offers for those who continue to stray has to be real.

Modernization and centralization has both its good points as well as its bad. The Service cannot be so far removed from those it is intended to service that there is no place for the average taxpayer to turn and be able to see or speak with a real live person who can assist them without having to first seek representation. The ability to access by phone is frustrating to say the least. If multiple calls are required you will never reach the person you last spoke with. Navigating the multiple selections of the menu is daunting to the average taxpayer. Technology has its positive side but it also can create new problems that if not addressed, will become bigger than the initial problem.

I would commend to the Board the most recent Public Report of the IRSAC Issued on November 10, 2004. It presents a clear picture of the areas of concern as addressed by the SBSE, W & I, and LMSB Subgroups as they worked with the operating divisions of the IRS this past year.

The Internal Revenue Service Advisory Council appreciates the opportunity to comment and we thank you.

Respectfully submitted,

Gary C. Rohrs, EA ABA ATA
