On page 37, 3d district, New Hampshire, transfer $4,005 50 from the seventh to the sixth column.

On the next line, strike out $4,005 50, and for $10,209 37 read $14,214 87. Make the same changes on page 186, second line.

In the line of totals, page 186, for $1,029,287 77 read $1,033,293 27, and for $77.529 25 read $73,523 75.

On page 70, third district, Ohio, fifth column, for $50 00 read $150 00. Same page, second district, Ohio, sixth column, for $12 00 read $12 50.

On page 87, ninth district, New York, in column wholesale dealers, read $1,050 01 for $1,050 00. In column of totals, same page and on the next line, read $34,855 40 for $34,855 48. In the 12th district, New York, on same page, and in column of totals, read $38,851 68 for $38,851 60.

On page 88, 23d district, New York, first column, for $120 60 read $120 00.

On page 89, 1st district, Pennsylvania, in column of penalties, strike out $221 00.

On page 90, 6th district, Ohio, under retail dealers, for $3,720 00 read $5,720 00. Same page, 3d district, Indiana, under physicians, read $720 00 for $72 00.

On page 91, 4th district, Indiana, in column of wholesale dealers, for $220 00 read $2,200 00. On the same page, in next column, 2d district, Indiana, for $1,110 00 read $1,100 00. In 18th district, Ohio, on the same page, and in column of totals, read $59,450 04 for $59,450 00.

On page 92, for "collection" read "collections."

On the same page, 4th district, Illinois, under rectifiers, for $335 00 read $325 00.

On page 96, for "pacific," read "specific."

On page 109, for "gal" read "gas."

On page 180 for the grand total of Washington Territory, read $8,263 40 in place of $8,263.4

REPORT.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Office of Internal Revenue, Washington, November 30, 1863.

SIR: The internal revenue laws have now been in operation long enough to test, in large measure, both the wisdom of their general policy and the efficiency of their particular provisions. The systems of taxation in other countries have grown up gradually with the growing demands of the government, and have been modified from time to time in the light of accumulating experience, adapting the burden more and more perfectly to existing conditions, with a view at once to equality of distribution, and to all possible relief from sensible pressure. But in the United States the needs of the government have so suddenly increased beyond all proportion to those of its early history, that it has become necessary to create and organize, with unprecedented rapidity, a new system of revenue. As other nations afforded no experience adapted to our own people, this was a work requiring for its perfection an amount and kind of knowledge and foresight not to be expected, and, indeed, not possible in any body of men. Those who are engaged in the practical administration of these laws can never cease to admire the measure of success attained by the efforts of Congress to accomplish it. We may now congratulate ourselves as a people on a policy of taxation, settled in all its main features, and adequate to the support of the government in the gigantic efforts now and recently necessary for its preservation. At the same time, many of the particular provisions of the laws must, for the present, be regarded as experiments, and their administration may be expected to point the way to gradual improvements.

The present tax laws, on the whole, have been not merely endured, but welcomed by the people in a manner, it is believed, elsewhere unparalleled. They have also added to the revenue of the nation, if not so much as was anticipated at the time of their passage, yet enough to improve largely the credit of the government, and to demonstrate the immense resources which it possesses yet untouched in the loyalty and growing wealth of the people. It may be admitted that important modifications must be made in these laws, in order to adapt them to the needs of the government as those needs are ascertained, and to the settled condition of public and social affairs, when that condition shall be restored. Yet for the present, while the nation is actually struggling for life, with burdens severer than any financial ones upon it, perhaps the main object of the revenue laws will be attained, if the ability and willingness of the country to meet any possible demands of this kind which the future shall present, be fully established. To this end, no sudden or violent change in the system of taxation devised by Congress appears to be necessary. On the contrary, it is believed that its capacity to produce revenue is not fully indicated by the receipts hitherto obtained. Not only are the productive property and the industry of the country, which are the great sources of this revenue, rapidly growing, but the administration of the laws is improving constantly, and is believed, with the aid of Congress, to be susceptible of such further improvements as will materially add to the revenue. Every advance in this direction is a manifest gain both to the government and the community; for it tends to equalize burdens, to discourage frauds and irregular speculations, and to encourage honest industry and legitimate traffic, while it directly increases the returns to the treasury. I shall, therefore, refrain from suggesting any radical changes, but shall propose such specific alterations as seem to be necessary, in order to enable the government to sustain its financial credit by the payment of interest on the accumulating debt incident to the prolongation of the war. And being anticipated, as they certainly are, by a loyal people, earnestly disposed to maintain the good faith and integrity of the nation, their adoption by Congress will not, I am assured, involve disappointment or dissatisfaction. I shall also take the liberty of inviting your attention to some modifications of the present method of procedure, which, with the experience of this office, appear desirable, as being calculated to render the collection of the revenue more simple, economical, and efficient.

There are a few provisions, now in force, which seem to be inconsistent in some measure with the general policy of the laws in which they are found; and others, in which, from all the experience, not only of this office, but of the revenue bureaus of other governments, some change appears desirable. These have been examined with much care and labor, and I shall allude to those which I deem important. Yet it is impossible to approach this subject without deep anxiety. For while taxation must always be a disturbing power among the laws which govern the distribution of wealth, affecting that distribution unequally, yet this evil is of small magnitude compared with that which results from great or frequent changes in the subjects and the severity of taxation. A fickle policy in this department of government tends powerfully to unsettle every kind of business, making its profits irregular and uncertain, and so to encourage a ruinous passion for sudden and uncompensated gains, instead of the desire of legitimate accumulation by productive industry.

On a comprehensive view of the subject, it will probably be seen that the existing revenue laws are not excessive, but, rather, inadequate, and that, to make them represent the obligations and needs of the government, they should be a greater, not a less, burden on the people than they now are. The revenue they produce is not sufficient to defray the necessary expenses of the nation. The general policy of the change, if any, now to be adopted, will, therefore, be to increase the revenue, not to lighten the burdens of the tax-payer. While it is probable that particular interests will be clamorous for relief from present duties, it is certain that the average burdens of the community must yet be greater than they are; and, therefore, that an enlightened legislation will, for the present, look with suspicion upon any proposal which involves a sacrifice of revenue. This surely is not a time to claim exemption or relief for any interest, unless the claim be grounded on obvious and momentous reasons of policy.

Among these claims, one appears pre-eminent. Section eighty-two of the act of July 1, 1862, requires the payment of a tax upon all dividends of life insurance companies, classing them with banks and fire insurance companies, in which capital is invested with a view of producing income. Indeed, it is expressly provided in section ninety-one of the same act that all dividends on which such tax shall have been paid may be deducted from the amount of income on which the income tax shall be payable, thus showing that the dividend tax of section eighty-two is designed by Congress simply as a substitute for the income tax, or, rather, as a simple and speedy mode of collecting the same. In the case of mutual life insurance companies its execution is surrounded by difficulties. The so-called "dividends" of those companies are declared and paid in such a variety of forms as not merely to embarrass the assessments of taxes upon them, but to render any really equitable adjustment of them impossible. And the difficulty may perhaps be found to lie, not in the organization of the companies, but in the tax law itself; for the "dividends" of these companies, although so-called by themselves, are not in any sense income to the nominal recipients; nor are they "dividends" at all, in the sense in which the word is used in other applications, for they are not revenue derived from the investment of capital. In fact, mutual life insurance companies require of the insured for their own security premiums greater in amount than the actual value of insurance. This places in the hands of the companies a surplus out of which to meet all exigencies; and the remainder is returned to the insured in the form of a remission of future premiums or of a cancellation of notes, or of a credit on the policies. In either case the return of the surplus so paid to the insured is called a "dividend," but has no [illegible] common with the dividends of banks or of joint stock companies which are really profits returned from capital invested. The income tax should not therefore, on principle, be assessed upon them. The objection is strengthened by the experience of this office, which shows that the levy of this tax so seriously complicates the accounts and embarrasses the operations of these companies as to inflict an injury upon their business far beyond the amount of the money directly obtained from them. It is not necessary to dwell upon the general grounds of public policy which demands that the practice of insuring lives should be encouraged by the government. The dividend tax seems, in itself to be inapplicable to these companies, and almost incapable of collection, and I can discover no sufficient reason for perpetuating it.

It may, however, be remarked that the stamp duty now required upon policies of life insurance is very low, and should the unequal tax on the dividends of these companies be abolished, a partial compensation to the treasury might be made by increasing the tax on life insurance in this form. It is believed that a stamp on every policy, or emolument of like effect, of fifty cents for each one thousand dollars of the amount insured, may be levied without oppressing the companies or discouraging the demand for insurance. It should also be remarked that life insurance companies which are not purely mutual, but which have a capital stock invested in them for the sake of revenue, should obviously be taxed upon the revenue in the same proportion as the gains and profits of any other business.

The administration of the existing laws has furnished valuable data for an inquiry into the sources from which any further increase of revenue must be derived. A careful comparison of the results already attained here with those which the larger experience of other nations has led them already indicate some of these with precision. A strong example is to be found in the excise upon distilled spirits. This was fixed by the act of July 1, 1862, at twenty cents per gallon. In Great Britain the same product is taxed ten shillings per gallon, or nearly twelve and a half times as much; and the revenue received by the British treasury from this source has been for some years, in round numbers, ten millions of pounds annually, or nearly equal to two-thirds of the whole internal revenue of the United States from all sources. Indeed, the tax on distilled spirits forms more than twenty per cent. of the whole inland revenue of the British empire, while under our present laws this tax will probably produce much less than ten per cent. of the whole receipts of this office. Yet in Great Britain even this severe tax is believed to be in all its bearings one of the least injurious of all sources of revenue, and one of those most cheerfully borne and least oppressively felt by the tax-payers.

It would obviously be impossible in this country to levy such a tax as that of England upon distilled spirits. With our more scattered population and less rigid surveillance the duty would be widely evaded, and would act as a direct premium on fraud. But there seems to be no good reason for maintaining a rate of taxation so much lower than that imposed by any other civilized nation upon an article which, though used by so many, is beneficial to none, and which, on all grounds of general policy, and by the usage of most governments, should head the list of taxable products. I respectfully suggest the propriety of recommending to Congress a tax of not less than sixty cents per gallon on distilled spirits.

Another product on which our excise tax bears very lightly, as compared with that of England, is malt liquor of all kinds; and the method of collecting this tax is as different in the two countries as its amount. The experience of Great Britain has taught her that it can be collected more efficiently, and with much greater ease, on the malt itself before brewing than on the liquor. Beer is there exempt, and malt is taxed heavily; while here, malt is exempted, even from our general tax on manufactures, and a light excise is placed upon beer. I am clearly of opinion that the English system is more economical in its administration, and far more productive of revenue, in proportion to the burden imposed by it upon the consumer, than our own. I would therefore suggest for consideration the propriety of imposing upon malt, under suitable regulations, a tax of thirty cents per bushel. Should it, however, be deemed advisable to continue the exception of malt, and tax only the liquor produced by it, it seems certain that the revenue might be considerably increased by a judicious enlargement of the tax, say to one dollar and fifty cents per barrel.

Certain provisions of the present law which relate to petroleum have occasioned embarrassment, and will probably receive from Congress some revision tending to make them more simple and efficient. Large natural deposits of this oil are being discovered. Its distillation is improving from time to time, so that its importance in commerce bids fair to increase rapidly for an indefinite period. If it be thought unfair to foster this product at the expense of others, by exempting it entirely from taxation, it would seem desirable, in order to facilitate collections, and make evasion of the duty more difficult, to levy it for the most part upon the crude oil before distillation. This oil for illuminating purposes is so cheaply produced as to be without a rival in the markets of the world; and were a moderate tax, like that now levied upon the distilled oil, or even one somewhat heavier, laid upon it in the crude state, it could not seriously check the increasing demand for it, nor injuriously affect those who have embarked capital in its production.

But however these suggestions may be regarded, the provisions of the one hundred and sixteenth section, allowing a drawback on articles which have paid a duty upon their exportation, seems, in its application to this oil, to be obviously injudicious. It is apparently a direct discrimination against the people of this country, and in favor of all other nations, in supplying which, nature has given us almost a monopoly. If there is any article on whose exportation it is justifiable to levy a direct tax, it is one of this character. As European nations are accustomed to tax products, the growth of this country, severely, in importing them, raising from them a very large revenue, it may be worthy of consideration whether the moderate duty, now imposed on this oil, may not be maintained when produced for export. Additional force is given to this thought by the practical difficulties experienced in administeriug the present law. Such complications occur as, it is feared, open the way for fraud. However this may be, the want of economy in keeping up an elaborate system for the repayment of duties once collected, and on which the government has paid commissions, is so obvious as to compel attention to the inquiry how far it may be possible to dispense with it. I therefore respectfully suggest that Congress be requested to consider the propriety of repealing the drawback now allowed on the export of illuminating oil.

Among the luxuries not in any form necessary to subsistence, and generally deemed, to some extent, noxious, and, therefore, usually selected by other nations as a peculiarly proper subject of tax, is tobacco. Our present excise bears very lightly on this commodity, and a larger tax would be, I think, very cheerfully borne without materially diminishing the production. In England the tax on every hunded pounds of unmanufactured tobacco, exclusive of warehouse duties, is seventy-seven dollars and seventy-two cents; on snuff one hundred and fifty-four dollars and sixty-four cents; and on manufactured tobacco two hundred and thirty-three dollars and thirteen cents; being on the last upwards of two dollars and thirty-three cents per pound. The objects sought to be attained by this mode of taxation were, doubtless, to raise as much revenue as possible from the importation of raw material, and to secure the profits of preparing it for consumption to the British manufacturer. It has been successful in both respects. The yield in revenue from this source for several years prior to 1861 averaged more than twenty-seven millions of dollars, while the manufactured article was, in great measure, excluded. For three years there were no importations of snuff, except eighteen pounds only, to Ireland, and the importations of manufactured tobacco, in all other shapes, ranged from two hundred and sixty-nine thousand to four hundred and twenty-eight thousand dollars only in value. In France the tobacco trade is a government monopoly; and while our exportations of the commodity in the leaf to that country are only inferior in amount to our exportations to Great Britain and Ireland, it took from us no more than twenty-nine pounds in three years, and the largest amount of manufactured tobacco exported thither in any one year was, in value, but seven thousand three hundred and seventy-one dollars. For many years our exports to France have varied from three-fifths to four-fifths of all the tobacco consumed in that kingdom. In 1862 they amounted to thirty-two millions three hundred and five thousand two hundred and forty pounds, at the average cost of eight cents and three-tenths of a cent per pound; and the net profits to the government, on the manufacture and sale of that product of American soil, was not less than thirteen million seven hundred and twenty-nine thousand five hundred and forty-eight dollars. Those profits have been estimated for several successive years, and been found to vary from four hundred and forty-seven to five hundred and fourteen per cent. on the price paid to the producers. The restrictions and limitations with which this trade is clogged by foreign nations have been long unsatisfactory to our people, and, in the year eighteen hundred and fifty-nine, they became the subject of certain resolutions of Congress, protesting that they were wholly inconsistent with that fair and reciprocal condition of commerce which ought to exist between the United States and those nations; but the protest, so far as I have learned, has been unheeded. Under such circumstances it is well to consider how, in laying our excise duties, we may at once serve the purposes of revenue and protect our own manufactures. There seems to be no good reason why we should furnish the raw product cheaply to foreign nations on such terms as to enable them to tax it for their own benefit and to make it a means of stimulating their domestic industry.

The diminished production, owing to the southern rebellion, was far short last year of what it was in previous years.

In 1860 it was, in round numbers, four hundred and twenty-eight millions of pounds. Last year it was only two hundred and eighty millions of pounds. This year, notwithstanding the extensive planting in the northern and middle States, the crop is estimated in the last report of the Agricultural bureau, at only two hundred and fifty-eight millions; being still one hundred and seventy millions of pounds less than in 1860. While the domestic production is thus diminished, the foreign demand has been constantly increasing, and it will not be likely to be seriously affected by the difference in price which its exportation, subject to our excise on the raw material, will occasion. I therefore beg leave to submit the proposition that tobacco be taxed in the leaf in the hands of the producer, and that no drawback be allowed on its exportation in that shape, so that the cost to the foreign manufacturer may be increased to the extent of our excise. If any drawback is to be allowed, the proper policy of encouraging and sustaining our own manufacturer, against adverse legislation of a foreign government, seems to require that it shall be allowed, if at all, only on the manufactured article. The extent to which the allowance should go is a question of some nicety. The tax on tobacco in the leaf, with all the stems on, might, I think, be fixed with advantage to the revenue, and without injury to the producer, at twenty cents per pound. A light tax, varying from five to ten or twelve cents per pound additional, might be imposed on the manufactured commodity. A drawback on this from ten to fifteen cents would give to the domestic manufacturer all the advantages he would desire in the foreign market, and would, in some measure, countervail the legislation of foreign nations to his prejudice.

The imposition of the tax on tobacco in the leaf is further recommended by the consideration that, united with proper regulations for inspection, it will tend to defeat the fraudulent practices by which the government is now deprived of much revenue due from this source.

Whether the excise on domestic wines, being luxuries, useless to the consumer, ought to be increased, may be questionable. The cultivation of the grape and the manufacture of wine in this country is still in an infant state, and good policy would seem to require that they be encouraged. Though the experience of Europe has shown that the consumption of spirits is not reduced by high rates of duties, it may be in some respects owing to the fact that cheap wines are not furnished to the consumer. If cheap, mild wine could be made to supersede spirits as the common liquor of the million, the result would be gratifying both in a moral and industrial point of view, and any modification of the excise tending in that direction would be desirable. I apprehend, however, that the tax on spirits must ascend to a much higher figure than has yet been proposed, before any appreciable effect will be produced in determining the choice of liquors on the part of those who habitually drink them, and that at all events, in the present needs of the country for increased revenue, a duty of ten cents per gallon on native wines will not be severely felt or be deemed unreasonable. These changes in the amount of duty to be laid on spirituous, vinous, and malt liquors seem to be suggested by common experience and the policy which obtains in every well poised system of taxation. They belong to a class of luxuries which may be properly denominated hurtful, and, if the consumption should happen to be affected by the weight of the taxes, the result would not be without compensation to the consumer and the country. The duties are now very low, in view of the modes of using the subjects of them. Twenty cents a gallon is but one cent and a quarter a half pint—a quantity usually sufficient, I presume, for one day's allowance for a moderate drinker. Three times that tax would not be sensibly felt, in a proportionable increase of price. If it would exert any influence on consumption, it would be in favor of the cheaper liquors, which, for that reason, could then better bear some additional duty.

If in making your estimates of the needs of the government, it should be found that no considerable increase in the amount derived from internal duties is desired, I should think it a question worthy of consideration, whether some increase of tax on all hurtful luxuries, including even tobacco, would not be eligible, so that relief might be afforded to those interests that produce the common necessaries of life. If an increase of the tax on certain products of which the use is purely voluntary, and at the same time at least useless, would be attended by a diminution of tax on such commodities as contribute to the support, comfort, or enjoyment of the community, the propriety of the change would seem to be obvious. But if a large revenue is wanted to aid in sustaining the national credit and supplying means for the large expenditures incident to the war, the reason for the change would become invincible.

In your estimate of last year, derived from information furnished by my predecessor, the amount of internal duties was stated at one hundred and fifty millions of dollars. The laws of excise were afterwards modified and rendered less productive, and the result of their operation has probably not equalled the expectations of Congress. The sum actually received into this office from all sources, between the first day of September, eighteen hundred and sixty-two, and the thirtieth of June last, was thirty-six million five hundred and eighty-six thousand three hundred and four dollars and fifty cents; and up to the first day of September of this year the receipts were forty-seven million four hundred and eighty-nine thousand four hundred and seventy-three dollars and three cents. Up to June thirtieth the drawbacks amounted to six hundred and seventy-six thousand six hundred and eighty-three dollars and seventy-three cents; and up to September first, five hundred and three thousand and sixty-six dollars and thirty-six cents.

At each of these dates, however, there were considerable sums in the hands of collectors, and the annual taxes, including those on incomes, had been only partially received. To say with accuracy how much the excise laws have yielded within a given period, is not practicable. Their operation is continuous. The machinery is constantly active. There are hardly ever in the mails less than half a million of dollars, including checks, drafts, and certificates of deposit to the credit of this office, in transitu. We can make an estimate; and I think it may be said with safety that the product of the taxes assessed within the year ending on the first day of September last, will amount to sixty-five millions of dollars. If the law should remain untouched, experience in its administration will enable the officers having charge of the subject to make the yield larger and the expense of collection less; and the increase inthe production of the country, owing to the activity of trade and industry, will operate in the same direction. I attribute to these causes an addition to the internal revenue of another year of not less than ten millions of dollars. If we add to this the probable results from the measures suggested in relation to spirituous, vinous and malt liquors, and to tobacco, in case of their immediate adoption, the internal revenue for the year eighteen hundred and sixty-four, reckoned from January to December, both months included, will reach the sum of ninety-two millions, without taking into calculation anything likely to come from districts now insurrectionary.

Should such a revenue not be equal to the estimated needs of the treasury, the necessary increase will reasonably be sought in an enlargement of the basis of taxation, or by adding to the duties now drawn from other sources, or by means of both these measures together. In view of the probabilities that a temporary increase of taxes may be demanded by immediate or anticipated exigencies, I will proceed to indicate the subjects which, so far as I am able to judge, will best bear additional burdens. In the performance of this duty I have been solicitous to find those which will yield the largest returns, with the least possible onerousness to the people.

There are beverages other than those already mentioned, which, being innocent, the use of them ought not to be discouraged, but which, nevertheless, may properly be required to contribute to the supplies demanded by the wants of the government. I refer to artificial mineral waters, soda waters, sarsaparilla waters. and other beverages of like kind usually sold in bottles. I propose a tax on these of two cents per dozen of bottles holding a half pint or less; and when sold in bottles of greater capacity, four cents per dozen for each dozen of bottles holding a pint or less; and when sold in bottles of still greater capacity than a pint, one cent per bottle. When sold in any other way, a duty of five per cent, ad valorem would not be immoderate.

There are certain articles which may fairly be denominated luxuries, and which are only within the reach of the opulent or prosperous, that may be made liable to duties not yet imposed without inflicting hardship on any. I allude to those mentioned in section seventy-seventh of the excise law, in schedule A, and I suggest that this schedule might be enlarged, so as to embrace subjects not there enumerated. Gold watches, pianos, guitars, dogs, looking-glasses beyond a certain size, diamonds, emeralds, and other precious stones, kept for ornament or use, may be instanced as falling within the scope of the reasons which called for the creation of this schedule. It is obvious to remark, however, that a tax on such articles is not sustained by the principle of excise which applies legitimately only to profits and products of annual consumption, and not to objects merely of taste or ornament, or to those of use or enjoyment, and that though there may be full ability to pay it, unless it bears a just proportion to the value of the articles on which it is imposed, it is felt to be oppressive, and will be evaded, or the use of the articles themselves abandoned. Though the incidence of taxes on articles of this character is upon a class well able to bear them, it is not to be denied that they are usually but little productive; and so far as the returns of our assessors go, those imposed by the seventy-seventh section do not constitute an exception to the common experience. The amount they have yet yielded pays but indifferently for the expense of collection, and the result points to the expediency of either repealing the section altogether, or of enlarging the list of effects upon which it is intended to operate.

Among those annual products of the soil which appear to be proper subjects of tax, and which, being needed in large measure by the manufacturing nations of Europe for the support of their industry, may be loaded with heavier duties without serious detriment to our own countrymen, is cotton. That product is now subjected to a duty of one half of one cent per pound. Quadruple the tax will not, in my opinion, be excessive. So insignificant a sum can be added to the price in the foreign market, without affecting the demand or exciting dangerous competition.

Thread and yarn manufactured and sold, or delivered for being knit or woven into fabrics, may properly be made subject to three per cent. ad valorem, the same as if such thread or yarn were sold in the market.

Boards planed, tongued, and grooved, shingles, bricks, Roman cement, calcined plaster, draining tiles, dressed building stone, printers' ink, maps, charts, periodical publications other than newspapers, and engravers' work, would bear an ad valorem duty.

The tax on auction sales is now very low, and will bear to be increased probably to one-fourth of one per cent.

The tax on slaughtered animals may be advantageously adjusted on a somewhat different scale without becoming onerous, viz: on each head of horned cattle, more than eight weeks old, slaughtered for sale, a tax of thirty cents; and on calves of eight weeks old and less, a tax of five cents per head. On slaughtered swine, exceeding fifty pounds in weight, ten cents per head.

The provisions of the 73d section of the act July 1, 1862, relating to goods made by persons for their own use, was reasonably supposed by my predecessor to be qualified by the clause limiting the amount of the annual product to six hundred dollars; but a number of railroad companies, and other large operators, who manufacture locomotive engines, railroad cars, paper for printing, and many other articles consumed by them in the prosecution of their business, embracing in the aggregate the value of millions, have insisted that the six hundred dollar limitation has application only to manufactures that are sold, not those consumed by the manufacturers themselves; and that construction has been adopted in several litigated cases. Though it may be in accordance with the legal intent of the statute, I cannot believe that it was contemplated by Congress to give to large corporations the privilege of carrying on extensive manufactures of wood, iron, and other materials, without the payment of a duty, because they happen to be such extensive consumers as to make the business of manufacturing for themselves profitable. It is not consistent with the general spirit of the legislation of that honorable body to discriminate in favor of corporate institutions or private firms, wielding enormous capital, to the prejudice of small manufacturers, and to the aggregation, instead of the diffusion, of capital, and the healthy condition of trade produced by active competition. I therefore beg leave to suggest the propriety of so amending the law as to make it answer plainly the original intent. This, I submit, may be done by requiring that all productions or manufactures used or consumed by the producers or manufacturers thereof, being articles of commercial value, and which would be taxable if sold, shall be in like manner taxable when used or consumed.

According to the construction given to the act of July 1, 1862, the manufacturer of clothing and other articles of dress, whether to order as custom work or for sale generally, was liable to a tax of three per cent. ad valorem.

The act of the 3d of March last exempted from duty tailors', milliners', dressmakers', and shoemakers' work, made to order as custom work, to the amount of one thousand dollars, and for any excess beyond that amount levied a duty of one per cent. on the value. The discrimination introduced by the amendatory act does not appear to me to stand on any just principle. It creates an inequality in the percentage which should be avoided, and operates practically in favor of that description of customers who are best able to pay. The thousand dollar exemption provides a limit which is not in accordance with the analogies of the law by which an exemption in all other cases of manufacture to the amount of six hundred dollars only is secured. I perceive no satisfactory reason why the tax on all articles made to order beyond the last-mentioned sum in value, and not otherwise provided for, should not be laid at the usual rate of three per cent. ad valorem.

I suggest that the income tax be left untouched, except in a few slight particulars. This tax, though as fair in theory as any that can be laid, has been found by the experience of other countries to be incumbered with practical difficulties in the assessment which have deprived it of all claims to public favor. The people of this country have accepted it with cheerfulness, to meet a temporary exigency, and it has excited no serious complaint in its administration. In order that it might not be felt to be inquisitorial in its character, the instructions issued by this office required that the returns of income shall not be open to the inspection of others than officers of the revenue. Some doubt having been entertained whether a proper construction of the law sustains the instructions, I recommend that the doubt be removed by express enactment. It will, I think, contribute to fairness if the provision allowing a deduction for rent paid for dwelling-houses be stricken from the law, and that owners of such houses, residing in them, be charged with their rental value as income. It seems to me, also, that a change in the rate of taxation of large incomes may be properly made, subjecting incomes over five thousand dollars ($5,000) and less than ten thousand dollars ($10,000) in amount to four per cent. tax, and those over ten thousand dollars ($10,000) and less than twenty thousand dollars ($20,000) to five per cent., and those exceeding twenty thousand dollars ($20,000) to five and a half or six per cent. The English rate is now over four per cent. in time of peace, and during the Russian war it was upwards of five and eight-tenths per cent. on all incomes over £150. If the English people could tolerate, without murmuring, such a tax to sustain a war of conquest and ambition, American citizens will certainly endure a lighter one for union and freedom.

There is a class of persons subject to the assessment of the income tax who claim exemption on peculiar grounds. I allude to the subjects of foreign governments representing them here as consular agents. Many of these persons are obliged to pay a tax upon the salaries which they receive from the home governments for their official services, and complaint is made, with some reason, that a double tax charged upon the same source is unduly severe. In some countries it appears that American consuls are obliged to pay taxes on their incomes however derived, while in others no such tax is exacted. I submit the consideration whether the same measure of liberal courtesy might not be extended to the subjects of foreign governments serving as consuls in our ports as are extended by those governments to American citizens serving abroad in a consular capacity. We have sufficient information in this office to enable us to make the proper discrimination. The inequality, if any should exist, will be attributed to the proper cause, and those who suffer by it will know where to apply for the remedy.

Among the most satisfactory branches of our excise law must be reckoned that which levies stamp duties on documents and instruments of evidence This tax is, of all others, the most easily and cheaply collected and most cheerfully borne; and it is believed that, in the future development of our system, it is the one from which most advantage may yet be expected from a gradual and judicious extension. It is not to be questioned that some of the stamp duties are already heavy enough to represent their full share of the taxation of the country; but there seems to be as little reason to doubt that some others may now be advantageously enlarged. There is, at least, one very important class of papers exempt on which it would seem just to levy a small duty, namely, receipts for the payment of money. Being of the utmost importance in all transactions, the necessity of making them valid evidence of payment would offer the strongest inducement to having them duly stamped. It is believed that, by subjecting them to one-half the duty now required on checks and sight drafts, a considerable revenue might be obtained without seriously burdening any interest. The penny stamp on receipts in England produced, in 1861, two millions two hundred thousand dollars. In this country, with a population much superior in activity and general intelligence, and universally habituated to proper modes of business, such a tax as is here proposed would be quite as productive as the stamp there of double the value.

Assignments and transfers of personal property other than instruments of evidence now provided for, by any writing, such as assignments in trust, deeds, for the benefit of creditors or others; bills of sale and documents of like nature may well bear a stamp proportioned to the value of the property conveyed. Indentures of apprenticeship, articles of partnership, attested copies of instruments made evidence by law, warrants of distress, writs of execution, letters patent for inventions, leases of personal property, certificates of copyright, commissions appointing persons to offices, certificates of admission of attorneys or counsellors to practice law, diplomas of medical schools, colleges, and universities, and certificates of marriage, are among the documents which offer themselves in the present needs of the government as eligible subjects of stamp duty, and by a general provision all written or printed instruments not otherwise provided for, might, when offered in evidence on the trial or hearing of any civil case at law before any court or judicial magistrate, be required to have a stamp of small value affixed.

The same reason that demands the enlargement of schedule B, suggests an increase of some of the duties for which it provides, especially those laid on instruments of evidence in common use. The stamp system has been far less fruitful than was anticipated, and in order that it shall contribute its due share to the revenues of the nation, the burdens it imposes must necessarily be increased. The basis of the excise scheme has been laid with so much skill and judgment as to comprehend every important productive interest, and to be incapable of material enlargement, and in providing means for the wants of the government little remains but to add to the weight of existing taxes, and I consider that there are few subjects that will bear the addition better than several enumerated in schedule B. Stamp duties are recommended by the fact that they are collected with very little cost, and in advising their increase, it is pertinent to remark that those imposed by the act of July 1, 1862, before the reduction effected by the amendatory act of March 3, 1863, while war was flagrant, and the admirable system of national finance now in successful operation not yet launched from your hand, do not approach in severity those in vogue in several European states in time of peace. I respectfully recommend that the stamp duties on promissory notes, inland bills, drafts and orders, and also mortgages and personal bonds for the payment of certain sums of money be doubled, and that the maximum of those to be required in any case be also doubled; that the stamp duties on agreements or contracts other than those specified in the schedule be ten cents; that the words "exceeding twenty dollars" be stricken from the clause in schedule B relating to bank checks, drafts or orders, and also from the first paragraph of the sixth section of the amendatory act; that the stamp duties on life, marine and inland insurance policies be doubled; that those on leases be proportioned to the rent reserved and the length of the term; that to letters of attorney to do single acts, such as enter satisfaction on a judgment or mortgage, execute a paper or document other than a conveyance, serve a notice or process to appear to a suit or action, to receive prize money or wages of labor, be assigned a moderate duty more appropriate to the nature of the service to be performed than that now provided; and that writs, summonses, and other processes for the commencement of actions before justices of the peace, in cases of civil jurisdiction, and writs of execution, also issued by such justices for the seizure or sale of goods, be made subject to a small stamp duty.

The sweeping provisions of the law invalidating all documents not correctly stamped seems, in our immature system, to be necessary, as furnishing the only sufficient security against evasion; yet there are many cases in which the amount of the appropriate stamp may be subject to reasonable doubt in itself, and many more in which the parties to an instrument may be unable to understand clearly the requirements of the law. In these cases it would seem reasonable to have some tribunal near at hand whose decision may be final in each case, so far, at least, that a particular document, the parties to which may have honestly endeavored to comply with the law, may not be liable to be invalidated by any subsequent decision of a judicial tribunal. I therefore respectfully suggest that the collector of each district be authorized, on the application of any party to a document, to affix to it the stamps which, in his judgment, are required by law, and that, upon the affixing of such stamps, he shall impress on the instrument the seal of his office, and also that the instrument so sealed shall not be deemed invalid by reason of a different interpretation or decision of the law thereafter made by any other tribunal, provided that in every such case the collector shall make a report of his action to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for approval; and that any person, believing himself to be aggrieved by the collector's decision, may appeal to the Commissioner, whose decision shall be final. Cases of particular hardship may in this way be avoided, and the severity of the law be mitigated in its operation upon persons honestly disposed to obey it, without impairing the security designed by its penal provisions.

In has been decided in the district court of the United States for the district of New Jersey that no tax can be assessed on lottery-ticket dealers under the internal revenue laws in States in which the sale of lottery tickets is prohibited by the local laws. This decision appears to me to be subversive of the intent of Congress as expressed in the act of March last, and I have confidence that such will be the final determination of the case. The opinion which seems to be entertained by the court that the provisions of the statute, requiring a license to prosecute the business of a lottery-ticket dealer, could not be enforced in a State where lotteries are forbidden by State authority, although the laws of the State are not enforced by the State officials, appears to me to stand on very questionable ground

The court seems to have confounded the distinction between acts which are merely mala prohibita and those which are mala in se, and to have forgotten that even gaming is not an offence at common law. The argument of the court in the case of lotteries would equally apply to licenses to sell liquors. But whether the court is right or wrong, it may be well, I suggest, to clear the obscurity, if any exists, by a definitive declaration of the law. And I suggest, also, that it may be well to consider whether it may not be eligible to reduce the tax now imposed on the sale of lottery tickets. So far it has yielded almost nothing, without preventing the sale of tickets. This result has added but another instance illustrative of the truth that public morals are not to be mended by legislation. Whatever improvement is to be had in that respect must be trusted to the influences of civilization and social melioration. A moderate tax on the sale of lottery tickets (and by moderate I do not mean what would be so deemed, when laid on necessaries, but in application to hurtful luxuries,) would be paid, but the present excessive one has been, and will continue to be, evaded, and thus to the moral evil of gambling will be added the demoralizing consequences created by habitual breaches of the law.

The eighteenth section imposes a tax of three per cent. upon the passenger receipts of railroad and steamboat companies. It is respectfully suggested that if additional revenue is needed the tonnage receipts of these companies might well be subjected to a tax rated as taxes of an analogous character. Such a tax would be borne by the active business of the country, which, being highly prosperous, could easily sustain it, and would possess the advantages of uniformity, simplicity in assessment, and cheapness in collection.

Revenue stamps are required to be affixed to despatches sent by telegraph companies, and a tax, analogous to that on railroad companies, is assessed on the receipts of steamboat, ferry-boat, bridge, express, and gas companies. Why the dividends declared on profits made by these last-named companies have not been subjected to duty does not clearly appear. They pass, it is true, into the hands of stockholders, and go to swell incomes, which are taxed under the ninetieth section of the act; but the assessment and collection of the income tax are much more troublesome and expensive than of that which is returned and paid by the several corporations liable for it, directly to this office, and it cannot be doubted that much, after being distributed to stockholders, escapes the grasp of the law altogether. The fact that the expense of collecting taxes on dividends of corporations does not exceed one-fifth of one per cent., and also that greater certainty and facility in collection are attained by their returns being made directly to this office, point to the expediency of widening the operations of the rule so as to embrace all corporate institutions making profits on dividends.

By the seventh section of the act entitled "An act to provide ways and means for the support of the government," approved March 3, 1863, all banks, associations, corporations, or individuals, issuing notes or bills for circulation as currency, shall be subject to and pay a duty of one per centum each half year from and after April 1st, 1863, on the average amount of circulation of notes or bills as currency issued beyond the amount named in the bill; and such banks, associations, corporations, and individuals, receiving deposits of money subject to payment on check or draft, except savings institutions, are required to pay a duty of one-eighth of one per centum each half year after the same date, upon the average amount of such deposits, beyond the average amount of the circulating notes or bills lawfully issued and outstanding as currency.

Monied corporations have a large interest in the financial credit of the country, and whenever their support becomes necessary, are usually ready to yield it with cheerfulness and promptness. I suggest that, in view of surrounding circumstances, two and two-fifths of one per cent. may be substituted for one per cent. in the act referred to, imposing tax on circulation; and that one-eighth of one per cent., the tax on deposits, may be increased to one-fifth of one per cent. There is no reason to apprehend that the additional burden will be regarded as severely oppressive, especially when viewed in connexion with other taxes demanded by present exigencies.

Sales at broker's boards, it would seem, ought to contribute to the revenue, for the same reason that exacts a tax from sales by auction. I suggest that a tax of one-twentieth of one per cent. be laid on sales at broker's boards.

The duty imposed on legacies and distributive shares has not yet proved as productive as was generally expected. Some modifications, it is supposed, might be made of the existing law without inflicting peculiar hardship on the tax-payer. If the duty laid upon property passing from decedents by wills, or under the provisions of statutes regulating descent and distribution, be moderately enlarged, and be made to apply to real as well as to personal estate, the yield would be considerably augmented. Estates passing by bequest, distribution, devise or descent lineally, might well pay a duty of one per cent., and those ansmitted by the same channels to brothers and sisters would bear an half per nt. additional; while those to which more remote kindred become entitled ight be somewhat more heavily charged than by the existing law. If the terests of those described in the second, third, fourth, and fifth classes of the e hundred and eleventh sections were taxed at the rates respectively of three, ve, and seven per cent., I think the additional burden would elicit no serious mplaint, and would be preferred as an alternative to almost any other kind of ty. I suggest also a limit to the exemption of property passing to husband r wife, and whether that limit might not be fixed as low at least as five thousand ollars, leaving all beyond that amount subject to a tax, say, of two per cent.

Our license system is also capable of some slight extension, and perhaps requires it, in order to make it operate equably. Conveyancers, mercantile gencies, persons whose business it is to buy or sell farm produce for others, nd who may be denominated produce brokers, owners and keepers of horse reatures which shall be entered for competition in any public trial of speed, ight be justly required to pay license taxes. The same may be said as to ersons whose business it is to contract for the letting of houses or other real state, or to collect rent for others; amending the fourteenth section of the sixty-ourth section by striking from it the word "rent."

The extension proposed to be given to the system of internal revenue, and he additional drafts on the producing sources above suggested, in view of the ncreasing wants of the government, cannot be fairly expected to yield the amount of one hundred and fifty millions of dollars, which, as I have already stated, was the estimate reported to you by this office in December last. If, therefore, it shall be deemed necessary to obtain by internal duties the last named sum, recourse must be had to some other quarter, in additional taxes imposed on products which enter largely into consumption. A tax of two per cent. additional on the general manufactures of the country would, I think, produce the required sum—probably a few millions more. In making the estimate, some allowance must be made for reduced consumption caused by the increased economy in the use, incident to increased taxes. Doubling duties on necessaries will not double the revenue, and the proportion of the receipts to the rate will be less than in the case of such luxuries as are used in gratifying the appetites. Consideration has been given to common experience on this point, and due allowance made for it.

The suggestions which I present for your consideration in this report are made for the purpose of aiding an effort which appears to be necessary, to provide for a larger revenue from excise.

Whatever may be necessary to be done to meet the wants of the treasury will, I am satisfied, be cheerfully submitted to by a loyal and patriotic people, zealous for the welfare and honor of the nation, and thoroughly determined to achieve success in the war now waged against its life, especially when assured that the burdens which they are asked to assume are likely to be temporary, and that there is every prospect that those burdens may be greatly lightened almost as soon as the rebellion shall have been suppressed.

The extension of the area of free labor and the development of the resources of the old slave States under the new system, together with the advantages to trade and business resulting from an equal currency, securing to each portion of the country the proper rewards of its own enterprise, cannot fail to promote production and to induce a condition of prosperity as yet unequalled in our history. When the federal authority shall have been re-established in the insurrectionary districts the productiveness of the excise law will be increased by the enlargement of its sphere of operation, and still more by the spur given to industry by causes springing from the bosom of southern society, relieved of a weight heavier than debt and regenerated by the spirit of freedom hitherto repressed in that region. The expense of collecting the revenue has been ascertained to be about six and two-twenty-sevenths per cent. on the actual receipts of the office. This is far below the cost of collecting in other countries. The same kind of taxes in England are collected at an expense exceeding eleven per cent. It is hoped and believed that as our system of excise matures a lower per centage can yet be obtained, and that, by the adoption of some new provisions, collections may be facilitated and cheapened with a saving of trouble and annoyance to the taxpayer. Such provisions I proceed to suggest.

1. As the law now stands the annual list embraces only the taxes on licenses, carriages, yachts, billiard tables, and gold and silver plate, all of which relate either to business avocations or to personal property. The sections of the law providing for the assessment and collection of these taxes were copied almost literally from the direct tax law of August 5, 1861, which operated exclusively on real estate. In the latter case it was proper, if not necessary, in order to secure uniformity and equality, to appoint a time and place to hear appeals and to re-examine and equalize the valuations, after due notice of their amounts had been given. The time fixed for hearing appeals was twenty-five days after publication of the notice. The lists being afterwards completed were to be handed over to the collector, who, within ten days after receiving them was by advertisement to require payment in twenty days. If not paid within that time, a personal demand was to be made, and ten days more given before proceedings for distraint could be commenced.

These provisions, slightly modified, were transferred to the excise law. The statement of them is sufficient to show their general inapplicability to personal taxes. That this proceeding is unnecessarily tedious and complicated is further shown by reference to the mode adopted for assessing and collecting the taxes on all kinds of manufactures, which are of vastly more consequence as sources of revenue than carriages, yachts, billiard tables, and plate. These taxes are assessed without advertising or hearing appeals by the assessor, and are collected without advertisement by the collector—all which is done within the period of one month, while the time occupied in realizing the taxes on the annual list, including the income tax, has averaged six months, if not more. Thus the present mode of gathering the annual taxes involves expense, delay, and labor wholly disproportioned to the results. I therefore recommend that the law be so modified as to require, after making due provision for appeals in all cases, the annual taxes, including the tax on incomes, to be assessed and collected in a manner similar to the mode provided for the assessment and collection of the monthly taxes.

2. The various provisions of the law relating to the time of assessing and collecting, and the mode of enforcing against delinquents the collection of monthly and other taxes, would be improved by being made more uniform. At present some of the provisions for the assessment and collection of the tax on annual incomes, besides being obscure and incompatible with those relating to the annual list, have caused perplexity and delay.

The returns of manufacturers are required to be made within ten days after the first day of each month, and the taxes are to be paid on such day as may be prescribed by the Commissioner. The returns of auction sales are to be made at the end of each month, or within ten days thereafter, and taxes paid at same time.

On slaughtered animals at the end of each month, and taxes paid at same time.

On receipts of railroads, &c., within five days after the end of each month, and taxes paid within five days thereafter.

No change is needed in reference to manufactures, but in all other cases it would be well if the returns should be required to be made to the assessor by the tenth of each month, and the payments by the twentieth, and the provisions of section nineteen, of the act of July 1, 1862, in reference to demand and collection applied to all.

No changes of this kind are needed in reference to distilled and fermented spirits.

3. It is desirable that penalties for neglecting or refusing to make payments according to law, when fixed at a per centum rate, should be uniform. The reason for adding only five per cent. to the tax on annual incomes, advertisements, and receipts of railroads, and ten per cent. on the tax on licenses, carriages, manufacturers, &c., is not evident.

If the rate of ten per cent. is to be applied to any of these classes of delinquency, it appears to me that it may with equal justice be applied to all.

I also recommend that the penalty of fifty per cent., prescribed by section eleven of the act of July 1, 1862, for neglect or refusal to make returns according to law, be reduced to fifteen per cent. for mere neglect, and to thirty per cent. for express refusal, and be made applicable to all assessments which assessors or their assistants are authorized or required to make in cases of neglect or refusal.

4. When it becomes necessary to resort to the remedy provided by action for the collection of taxes and recovery of fines and penalties, much delay and inconvenience are experienced for want of some tribunal by which cases, where the sum in controversy is small, may be disposed of in a less expensive and more summary way than is consistent with the ordinary mode of jury trial in the United States courts. In districts of large territorial extent embarrassment is experienced by reason of the wide distances by which courts having jurisdiction are separated from the persons upon whom processes are to be served, and the infrequency of the sessions of the courts in which trials can be had; and in large cities the calendars of the United States courts are so crowded with cases that more than a year must often elapse before issues can be determined. The costs of the proceedings are often out of all reasonable proportion to the sums in dispute, and affect oppressively the parties that have to pay them. As a means of facilitating such collections, and affording to the United States and citizens alike an opportunity of having their respective rights in all internal revenue cases quickly and cheaply adjusted, I beg leave to suggest whether it will not be expedient to confer civil jurisdiction on commissioners appointed or to be appointed by the circuit courts, where the sum in controversy does not exceed a certain limit to be named in the laws, and I should think that limit may be safely fixed at two hundred and fifty or three hundred dollars. Right of jury trial may be secured by making provision for appeal. As a condition annexed to the benefit of appeal, security for costs may be required of any other party than the United States. A tribunal of the kind suggested, making justice under the internal revenue laws rapid in movement and small in expense, would probably be found to be peculiarly acceptable to the citizen as well as useful to the government.

5. Having understood that some doubt has been expressed in a quarter entitled to respect, whether the provisions of the act of 2d of March, 1833, chapter 57, relating to the removal of cases from the State to the federal courts embrace those that arise under the internal revenue laws, I suggest the propriety of removing all ground of doubt by amendment.

6. Circumstances have occurred that indicate the propriety of authorizing collectors where resistance is made or threatened, in cases of distraint, to call for aid upon the United States marshal, and whenever it may be necessary for the safe custody of goods distrained, to give them over to the care of the marshal till sold or otherwise disposed of.

7. It appears to me that it would be highly eligible that authority should be devolved somewhere more distinctly than it now is, to exercise supervision over suits instituted in the name of the United States for the enforcement of penalties against delinquents under the internal revenue laws, and to compromise suits and claims when deemed for the interest of the treasury. Suits have been instituted, and costs incurred in cases, which this office would not have advised, and money may often be saved by accepting terms of accommodation offered by parties prosecuted for penalties, where little prospect exists for recovering anything by proceeding to judgment and execution.

As the administration of the internal revenue laws is intrusted mainly to this office under your direction, I suggest that a provision that all fines, penalties and forfeitures, or the share of them recovered under those laws, belonging to the government, be paid into this office, and that the costs of suits and prosecutions which shall be instituted by the United States for such fines and penalties, and for internal revenue duties, be paid by this office out of such moneys as may be here received for taxes, so that the whole subject may be brought within the cognizance of officers appointed under the internal revenue laws.

My predecessor recommended that the purchase of iron safes be authorized for the use of assessors and collectors. The subject is one of much importance, especially in districts where large amounts of revenue are collected. I beg leave to renew the recommendation. The destruction of valuable papers of a collector, in one instance, within a few months, has caused great inconvenience and some loss, and the experience of the office confirms the wisdom of Mr. Boutwell's suggestion.

It is important that the compensation of the officers engaged in assessing and collecting the internal revenue should be determined on proper principles. As the law now stands, when the collections amount to four hundred thousand dollars, the collector is entitled to his maximum compensation, and the expense attending all subsequent collections during the year must be borne by him without remuneration from any source. Such an arrangement, it will be perceived, tends to discourage collectors, in districts yielding large revenue, from performing their duties, as the greater his energy and diligence the less is his profit. I propose, as a juster mode of compensating this officer, that a certain fixed salary be given to each collector and a small commission be allowed him on all sums which he shall collect. An adjustment of the compensation, I am satisfied, can be so made by this mode as not to require a larger amount to be paid to the whole body of collectors, and will secure to each a compensation proportioned to his labor and responsibility.

The assessor receives his maximum on the collection of six hundred thousand dollars, and for whatever trouble or expense he incurs on assessments over that sum he is not remunerated. If an allowance of one-tenth of one per cent. on all moneys collected in the district should be made to this office, it would, I think, compensate him sufficiently and operate as a stimulus to effort in the proper direction.

The compensation of assistant assessors is also a subject worthy the attention of Congress. If it can be fixed in such a manner as to give them an interest in making their sub-districts productive, the government will, I have no doubt, profit by it, and persons who now escape assessment altogether will be required to pay their due share of taxes.

In compliance with the provisions of the 33d section of the act of July 1, 1862, requiring that separate accounts shall be kept at the treasury of all moneys received from internal duties in each of the respective States, Territories, and collection districts, and that separate accounts shall be kept of the amount of each species of duty or tax that shall accrue, so as to exhibit, as far as may be, the amount collected from each source of revenue, with the money paid to collectors and other officers employed in such district, separate accounts, as required by the act, have been kept. They are not yet, however, so complete as to enable me to append to this report an abstract, in tabular form, showing the receipts from each district, and the expenses of collecting the taxes in each.

Several collectors, though repeatedly urged, have, as yet, failed to make to this office the proper returns, without which full and complete accounts cannot be prepared. I trust, however, that I shall be able to present you with an accurate statement of the expenses of collection, in connexion with a supplementary report, before the first day of January next.

In attempting to indicate the sources from which additional means may be drawn to meet present exigencies, I trust that I have not exceeded the limits proper to be observed in this report. It is apparent to every intelligent mind that while the rebellion lasts the national debt must continue to accumulate, and that the ability of the government eventually, to meet all demands upon it, must be clearly demonstrated. In such a war as that in which the country is now engaged, the contest is as much of exchequers as of armies; and the soundness of the national credit, of which you are the appointed guardian, is indispensable to success in the field or on the ocean.

With sincere respect, your obedient servant,

JOSEPH J. LEWIS,
Commissioner.

Hon. S. P. CHASE,
Secretary of the Treasury.

7/1/63

OF

THE COMMISSIONER OF INTERNAL REVENUE.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Office of Internal Revenue, December 21, 1863.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith the abstract, in tabular form, (see tables marked A, B, C, and D,) of all moneys received from internal duties, and of the amount collected from each source of revenue in each of the respective States, Territories, and collection districts from the organization of this office to the close of the last fiscal year, as called for by section thirty-three of the act of July 1, 1862, entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the government and to pay interest on the public debt." By the same section a similar abstract is required of the moneys paid to the collectors and deputy collectors, and to the other officers employed in each of the respective States, Territories, and collection districts. But it has been found impossible to obtain the materials for such an abstract, since the accounts of collectors have not yet been audited and settled for that period. As soon as they can be adjusted, the table will be prepared and transmitted to you in a further supplementary report.

The returns herewith presented cover a period of ten months from September 1, 1862, the day on which the internal revenue laws went into practical operation, to June 30, 1863. They are full of interest, as indicating the results to be expected from a well digested scheme of national taxation, and as suggesting improvements in our present laws, but cannot be accepted as representing the power of these laws to produce revenue. The inauguration of a great system, affecting the interests of millions, is fraught with difficulties not easily exaggerated. It was, of course, impossible that upon one day all the numerous and complicated provisions of our revenue laws should become practically and fully operative. The returns from one of the most important sources of revenue, the stamp schedule, were in part postponed for four months by subsequent legislation of Congress, and somewhat also by the inability of this office to provide the required stamps for a still longer time. All branches of the law were entirely novel to the people of the nation, and it required some months to make them acquainted with their duties and liabilities under it, and to familiarize the officers of the revenue themselves with its practical administration. The efforts of this office have been steadily directed to these ends, and the increasing returns of assessments and collections throughout the country indicate that they have been to a considerable extent attained.

In order to exhibit more clearly the workings of the system, I have appended an additional tabular abstract, (see tables marked E,) which shows, in parallel columns, the amounts of assessments and collections of revenue in each of the United States and Territories from September 1, 1862, to June 30, 1863, and from September 1, 1862, to August 31, 1863; it also shows, in parallel columns, the population and wealth of each of the States and Territories in which the assessments and collections of revenue are not disturbed by an unsettled state of society, and the total amount of internal revenue contributed by each, with the percentage of the total population, wealth, and internal revenue of the United States, belonging to each State, respectively; it also shows the amount of income tax assessed for 1862, and the returns of the excise on distilled spirits from September 1, 1862, to November 1, 1863, with the territorial distribution of these taxes also. Another table (see table marked F) shows the amounts of assessments and collections of revenue in each of the United States and Territories from September 1 to December 31, 1862, and monthly thereafter to August 31, 1863. These tables supply information on subjects in which the principal tabular abstract is deficient, for that abstract closes with the fiscal year on the 30th of June, at which time few returns for income had been received. And the collections on distilled spirits for the year are also inadequately represented upon it, since a very large part of this product consumed during the ten months had been distilled in anticipation before it became subject to duty, and so escaped payment. It is confidently believed, indeed, that this tax alone, if unchanged, may be relied on hereafter for a revenue of nearly, or quite, fourteen millions a year.

In view of the pressing needs of the government, and of the great falling short of the estimates of last year in the receipts of internal revenue, your recent annual report suggests to Congress the expediency of extending our tax laws, so that they may produce not less than one hundred and fifty millions per annum. The present condition of our national finances, and the probable expenditures of the government for some years to come, unite to press this suggestion upon the immediate consideration of Congress. I have carefully reviewed the present laws, in the light of the experience of this office for a year of their administration, and have endeavored to discover those sources of revenue to which the treasury may most safely and profitably look for the large sums needed. Assuming that Congress, in their wisdom, will adopt a system of imposts which will return the sum named above, I have sought to suggest the outlines of such a system in the form likely to be least oppressive to the tax-payer, least expensive in collection, and least liable to frauds.

Of the excise duties levied by existing laws, that of twenty cents per gallon upon distilled spirits is unquestionably, in all respects, the most susceptible of large increase. In England, the tax on spirits has varied, during the last forty years, from seven shillings to eleven shillings eight and a quarter pence per gallon, and is now ten shillings sterling, equivalent to two dollars and forty-three cents, or, if present rates of exchange be considered, to four dollars six cents per gallon. The experience of Great Britain, in the multitude of experiments the government has tried with this duty, seems to show that a tax of this amount, or nearly a thousand per cent. upon the actual cost of the article, has but a limited effect upon its consumption. It is there collected with facility and cheapness, and yields about ten millions of pounds annually to the treasury, or more than half the entire product of the excise laws. And should the vast expenditures of an European war increase the necessities of the British government, a still higher tax on spirits would probably be levied, as one of the most obvious and most productive sources of supply.

It is commonly agreed by all who have studied this subject that the question of the amount of tax to be levied on distilled spirits is to be decided solely upon considerations of revenue. Alcohol, it is true, has important uses in the arts, but the whole amount so consumed is very small as compared with the total production. Even in England, where, after the process of methylation, all the spirits needed in the arts are sold entirely free of duty, and at a price extremely low, thus liberally encouraging their consumption, the whole amount so consumed is less than four per cent. of the amount used as a beverage. And, if it be practicable, without great frauds, to exempt the alcohol used in manufactures in this country from taxation, there is no doubt the effect on the revenue would be trifling, while the advantages to a few manufacturing interests would be considerable. But the general principle of levying a large part of the public revenue from luxuries and vices applies to this article, with very little modification on account of these exceptional uses; and it is presumed that Congress will determine to raise from it the highest amount of revenue possible, if the government needs so much. Although it is not believed that any duty would seriously diminish the consumption, it might be made to defeat its own object, by stimulating fraudulent production and trade—he greatest evil, doubtless, which a tax could bring with it; and the introduction here of an excise as heavy as the English would have great influence in this direction. The condensed population and limited area of Great Britain facilitate the collection of this heavy impost and the detection and prevention of frauds upon the revenue. With our long frontier, and the vast tracts of land in our northwestern States, sparsely settled and remote from the observation of the government and its officers, there would be very great difficulty in preventing and punishing smuggling and illicit distillation were our tax on spirits made as heavy as is the English. The reward of two dollars and forty-three cents per gallon would be large enough to call into exercise considerable capital and great ingenuity for illegal production and traffic, and with these the government would be perpetually at war. While the high tax might, perhaps, be made to produce more revenue than any lower duty, and therefore might be endured in case of a great fiscal emergency, yet it would require such severity in its administration as would be out of harmony with the general course of our government. Besides, so severe a burden thrown suddenly upon a single branch of industry would give a shock to trade not to be justified save by the strongest necessity. Yet it may be safely estimated that this tax of two dollars and forty-three cents on distilled spirits, so far from being prohibitory, would, after the recovery of the business from the depression at first caused by its imposition, and after the consumption of the stock already produced, yield to the treasury a revenue of nearly one hundred millions per annum. And it is worth while to remark that in the possibility of laying and collecting this duty alone, if the necessities of the government should require it, the nation has a source of revenue yet almost untouched sufficient to pay the interest on the entire debt of the United States.

If it be determined to raise the full amount of one hundred and fifty millions from internal revenue, it will, I presume, be necessary to derive more than one-half of this sum from the excise on beverages and tobacco, or else to inflict serious injury on the manufacturing and trading interests of the country, by burdens much more severe than those now laid on them, or, finally, to increase the taxes on the various forms of income to an oppressive extent. It is believed that seventy-five millions can be raised from the sources named above without any of these evil results. Thus, from the best information within my reach, I am of opinion that a tax of one dollar per gallon on distilled spirits would, after the first year, produce fifty-four millions of dollars annually; a tax of five cents per pound on leaf tobacco, and thirty cents on all manufactured tobacco, except that made exclusively of stems, would yield at least twenty-four millions of dollars, allowing a drawback of ninety per cent. of the tax on export, and an equal or greater sum could perhaps be obtained by exempting the leaf and taxing the manufactured article fifty cents, if adequate provisions be made for detecting and preventing evasions and frauds. A beer tax of one dollar and a half per barrel would yield six millions of dollars. There can be no doubt that these duties would be more easily and cheaply collected, and less severely felt by the people of the country at large, than any others ever yet suggested, from which the same amount of revenue could be obtained.

It is obvious from the present state of the revenues, and the returns herewith submitted, that the sum required cannot be obtained without a system of taxation heavier than we now have. The internal revenue now obtained produces little complaint and less real suffering on the part of any of the interests taxed; and the receipts of the office during the current fiscal year, should the excise remain unchanged, now promise to be somewhat greater than my estimate of November thirtieth, and may perhaps be safely reckoned at eighty-five millions of dollars.

Should the taxes mentioned above be modified, as suggested, the total annual revenue from internal duties would not be less than one hundred and twenty-five millions of dollars, although the entire increase would not be realized the first year. It is believed that a modified schedule of stamp duties might be made to add five millions of dollars; that petroleum ought to yield, in some form, three millions of dollars more than now; and that additional provisions for the general and thorough collection of the income, and other taxes, in which the government is now easily and largely defrauded, may increase their product at least seven millions of dollars more. If, as a rough estimate, we add an increase of three millions of dollars in cotton, and one million in sugar, it may safely be affirmed that the permanent net income of the government through this office will not be less than one hundred and fifty millions of dollars.

If it be thought desirable to tax the receipts of railroads for freight as well as passengers, to add to the assessment of each man's income the value of the rental of the premises occupied by him as a residence, to increase the tax on coal, and to levy a light per-centage on sales of brokers, now exempted by law, a considerable addition may be made to the revenue named above, without, I think, severely burdening any interest. Of the expediency at the present time of any or all of these changes, it is for the wisdom of Congress to judge. I may be permitted, at the risk of repeating what was said in substance in my former report, to suggest one most important consideration, bearing upon all action on this subject, which is forced upon us by the whole history of taxation in different countries, and nowhere more impressively than in that of our own recent legislation. It is the vast importance of speedily maturing a general scheme of duties, in the most perfect form attainable. Scarce any influence is more potent to injure all branches of business, and to disturb the steady accumulation and regular distribution of wealth, than an unsettled and changeable policy of taxation. The information that can be as yet obtained, on many of the elements of the subject, is perhaps too imperfect to enable any branch of it to be brought at once to the form which experience and the further wise deliberations of the national legislature will finally give. But it seems at least obvious that no pains should be spared to approach this end as rapidly as possible; to make at once, and unhesitatingly, all the changes which are clearly demanded by sound policy, and to avoid experiments in all parts of the law, where no such strong and obvious considerations indicate a change.

The accompanying tables have been made as complete as possible, and some of them have been kept open, at great inconvenience until now, in hope of attaining greater accuracy. No monthly returns of collections whatever have been received at the date of this report from the fifth district of Maryland, the second of Virginia, the second of Kentucky, the fourth of Ohio, or the sixth of Wisconsin. The third district of Indiana is in arrears for eight of the ten monthly reports of the first fiscal year; the fifth Michigan for six, the first Michigan for three, the second California for two, and the ninth Pennsylvania and the district of Washington Territory, each, for one. Very many of the annual and monthly lists of assessors also, which are essential to the completion of the statistics required by Congress, have not yet come to hand, although every effort has been made by the office to impress upon both classes of officers the necessity of promptness. In some cases peculiar difficulties have been experienced by them in completing their returns, and their excuses relieve them of blame. It is hoped that in another year there will be far less difficulty, and no delay, in presenting the full statistics of the office in an intelligible form, at the opening of the session of Congress.

The preparation of the tables, embarrassed as it has been by the inexperience or remissness of some of the officers whose returns were needed, has required severe labor. Relays of clerks have been employed without intermission night and day for a considerable period, and they have in addition to their ordinary duties performed an amount of work that is really surprising. The zeal and alacrity with which they entered upon and prosecuted their arduous labors is worthy of all praise. In this office the ordinary hours allotted to business have not been regarded when any duty, as is uniformly the case in some of the divisions, and frequently happens in others, has appeared to require the presence of the clerks at their desks.

I am, with great respect, your obedient servant,

JOSEPH J. LEWIS, Commissioner.

Hon. S. P. CHASE,
Secretary of the Treasury.

ABSTRACT OF THE FOLLOWING TABLES.

A. Collections from each specific source of revenue, except stamps, salaries, and passports, in each collection district, State, and Territory, for the last month of the first quarter, and the last three quarters of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1863.

B. Statement of sales and deliveries of stamps, exhibiting the number delivered of each denomination, the per-centage of each kind delivered, and the per-centage of value of each kind delivered from the organization of the office to the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1863, and for the first quarter of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1864.

C. Receipts from salary tax to the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1863, and monthly thereafter, for the first two quarters of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1864.

D. Recapitulation to the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1863, including receipts from passports through the Department of State.

E. Comparative table showing the territorial distribution of internal revenue, population, and wealth in the United States.

F. Assessments and collections of internal revenue in each collection district to December 31, 1862, and monthly thereafter to August 31, 1863, i. e., for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1863, and for the first two months of the first quarter of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1864.
