REPORT

OF THE

COMMISSIONER OF INTERNAL REVENUE

ON THE

OPERATIONS OF THE INTERNAL REVENUE SYSTEM

FOR THE

YEAR ENDING JUNE 30, 1864.

WASHINGTON:
GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE.
1865.

REPORT

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Office of Internal Revenue, December 1, 1864

SIR: In obedience to the provisions of the thirty-fourth section of the act of July 1, 1862, entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the government and pay interest on the public debt," which have been re-enacted by an act bearing the same title approved on the 30th day of June last, accounts have been kept in this office of all moneys received from internal duties in each of the respective States, Territories, and collection districts, exhibiting the amount collected from each source of revenue, and the sums expended as compensation and for allowances to the several officers of internal revenue employed in the collection and assessment districts. Tabular abstracts of these accounts have been prepared and are herewith submitted. They are somewhat more minute and specific than seem to be required by the act of Congress, but not more so, I apprehend, than is necessary to present, in convenient form for practical use, the information desired. They show—

First. Collections from each specific source of revenue—except stamps, salaries, and passports—in each collection district, State, and Territory, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1864.

Secondly. Statements of sales and deliveries of stamps, exhibiting the number delivered monthly of each denomination, and the number and aggregate value of each kind delivered during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1864.

Thirdly. Receipts from salary tax for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1864.

Fourthly. Recapitulation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1864, including receipts from passports through the Department of State.

Fifthly. Comparative table, showing the territorial distribution of internal revenue, population, and wealth in the United States.

Sixthly. Expenses attending the assessment and collection of the internal revenue during the fiscal year.

It will be seen that the amount of revenue produced by the act of July 1, 1862, and its supplements, considerably exceeded the estimates. Although the act of March 7, 1864, by which the tax on spirits was increased from twenty to sixty cents per gallon, added several millions to the revenue, the law as it stood, without that amendment, would have produced at least a hundred millions—twenty-two millions beyond the estimate of the Secretary of the Treasury, and fifteen beyond the minimum stated in my report. Even that result did not fairly represent the power of the laws then existing to produce revenue. A system of national taxation, so complicated in its details, and so unwieldy in its proportions, could not be made immediately operative, in all its provisions, throughout a continent. To apply it to all the interests it was intended to affect, and to familiarize the people with their duties and responsibilities under it, and the officers of the revenue with the modes of administration, were necessarily the work of time, and of more time than had, at the date of my last report, been afforded it.

The efforts of this office, earnestly directed to these ends, produced their proper results. The officers became more expert, the taxes were more strictly assessed, and the flow of revenue steadily increased. The average monthly product for the first six months was $4,522,332 90. Up to the 1st of May, 1863, no separate monthly account of the receipts was kept, and no accurate statement can be made of them.

In May, 1863, the receipts were	$4,963,895 02
In June, 1863, the receipts were	4,488,411 49
In July, 1863, the receipts were	5,298,967 18
In August, 1863, the receipts were	5,604,201 35
In September, 1863, the receipts were	6,136,205 43
In October, 1863, the receipts were	9,511,768 64
In November, 1863, the receipts were	7,953,983 08
In December, 1863, the receipts were	9,034,501 01
In January, 1864, the receipts were	9,177,765 25
In February, 1864, the receipts were	9,355,094 63
In March, 1864, the receipts were	8,149,953 14
In April, 1864, the receipts were	10,945,111 95
In May, 1864, the receipts were	12,098,402 16
In June, 1864, the receipts were	14,994,366 77

This rapid increase, though in part owing to the improved acquaintance which the revenue officers acquired by experience in their duties, and to their familiarity with the routine of administration by constant exercise of their official functions, is, in part, due to other causes. The general anticipation of the imposition of additional duties induced speculation, and imparted, for a time, a strong stimulus to the manufacture of several articles, especially spirits and tobacco, and materially affected the revenue during the months of May, June and July. We may properly attribute to such causes an additional yield of three and one-half to four millions during the last of those months, but I think not more, and I am well satisfied that, without any increase of duties, the law, as it stood on the twenty-ninth day of June last, would have yielded for the current fiscal year full one hundred and twenty-five millions of dollars, if it would not, as I incline to think it might, under certain favorable conditions of trade and business, have realized the estimate of my predecessor in office. If experience has not justified his expectations, it is because the allowance which he made for losses through the inexperience of the government officers, and fraudulent evasions on the part of disloyal tax-payers, are less than the event has proved necessary, though large enough to satisfy the doubts, à priori, of the most cautious calculator.

The act approved on the 30th day of June last has not thus far proved more productive than the laws which it repealed and supplied. This is owing to several causes. In some kinds of production the stock accumulated was large and considerably beyond the immediate demand. In the instance of cotton goods, the price of the raw material has advanced since July, while the market value of manufactured articles for a time suffered a marked decline, from which it has not wholly recovered. The increase of taxes has also had the usual effect of such a measure, to check production, at least temporarily, and to abate the activity of inland trade till business should become accommodated to the new circumstances. It has thus happened that the revenue collected in August was but $15,712,066 84, against $14,994,366 77 collected in June and $16,570,548 39 in July; that in September only $15,819,770 72* were received, and in October $13,625,350 04. These sums, however, do not represent the average receipts which may be reasonably expected for the remaining eight months of the fiscal year. For example, the excise on distilled spirits, which is reasonably expected to prove very productive, has yielded scarcely anything during these months. The number of gallons distilled in June last, according to the returns of the collectors, was 10,468,976; in July, only 697,099. But now the stock of spirits on hand in July has been largely reduced, and an additional supply will soon be needed to meet the demand. The same may be said of tobacco. The manufacture of both of these articles must soon be actively renewed. The temporary check on other productions must cease to operate, and the growing demand for consumption must be supplied by a more spirited movement on the part of the producers. The revenue will increase as business improves. What the present law will yield within the current fiscal year it is difficult to estimate. Much depends upon conditions which are subject to contingencies. Whether our cereals shall be used in large or in moderate measure for distillation will be determined by the amount of the English and other European crops, and the consequent state of the grain market abroad. The supply of cotton will affect the manufacture of cotton cloths, and that of wool the manufacture of woollen cloths, and of course, proportionably, the revenue derived from such manufactures.

* The sum which was covered into the treasury during the first three months of the current fiscal year was $46,562,869 92. The amount actually received during those months into the treasury as the proper internal revenue of the quarter, beyond all payments to collectors of salaries and commissions, and to assessors and assistant assessors for salaries and expenses, was $48,265,850 16. The difference is merely nominal, and is of account only. It arises from the fact that notice of the payments to the national depositaries is not in all cases given by them promptly to the Treasurer, and his books do not show the payments till the notice is received. Our books show the payments when the certificates of deposit reach the hands of the cashier.

The experiences of the past two years will, however, furnish us with data for an estimate which, if not to be relied upon for entire accuracy, will approximate nearly enough to actual results for all practical purposes.

Among the sources of revenue supposed to be most prolific is the five per cent. income tax levied under the provisions of the joint resolution of the 4th day July last. Of that no part has yet been paid. I consider that the income tax collected during the last fiscal year, although part of it was of the assessment of the previous year, represents pretty fairly what a levy of three per cent. under the provisions of the late law should yield. The amount of that tax collected was $23,666,033 98. Of this there was collected as tax on incomes less than $10,000 the sum of $7,944,153 51. Add to this two-thirds of the same sum, and we have as a total $13,240,255 85, which, with the addition of the amount collected of incomes exceeding $10,000, viz: $6,855,160 37; that of citizens resident abroad, $58,674 51; that to be obtained from the tax on United States securities, $302,495, 72; from dividends and interest on bonds, $9,356,729 37; with the tax on salaries, $2,838,541 05; make a total of $34,986,039 21. This estimate will not be maintained as to the items of tax on dividends and salaries, because many persons will escape assessment who could not escape payment through banks, railroad corporations, and paymasters. But the duties on incomes will, in general, be assessed more exactly and collected more closely than heretofore. The assessors are armed with powers for investigation and discovery which have not heretofore been conferred, and they have become more thoroughly acquainted with their obligations under the law than at any prior period. This view is confirmed by an examination of the sssessment returns from several collection districts, showing a large advance upon the income tax of last year I am thus led to believe that the product of the five per cent. levy under this joint resolution will not be less than thirty-five millions of dollars.

Some expectation has been entertained that Congress might during the ensuing session reduce the tax on spirits. This, together with an apprehension that the stock on hand may be subjected to duty, is now exercising an unfavorable influence on production. Consumption, however, proceeds at its accustomed rate. In the city of New York alone, according to the statements of large dealers, [illegible] hundred barrels are consumed daily, Sundays not excepted. These statements may exaggerate the truth. However that may be, it is certain that a [illegible] supply will soon be needed to meet the demand, and the irrevocable laws of [illegible] will compel the resumption of distillation. If those engaged in the manufacture and sale of spirits were satisfied of the permanency of the law imposing the taxes, and that the market would not be unsettled by the agitation of the subject in Congress, the business would soon find its proper channels and become accommodated to the burdens cast upon it. It is important alike to the interests of the government and of the people that frequent changes in legislation, affecting the prices of articles that enter largely into consumption, should, if possible, be avoided. This observation, which applies indeed with less force to dispensable luxuries than to absolute necessaries, is certainly true as to a commodity, the use of which, as a beverage, in some form or another, has become well nigh universal. A large amount of capital is invested in its production and in the trade, domestic and foreign, of which it is the subject, and the regular and steady employment of that capital accrues to the benefit of the country, while an unsettled and variable excise invites to speculation and creates irregular movements in business, demoralizing to the community of traders and injurious to the general weal. It is to be regretted, indeed, that the whole increase of duty was not imposed at once, instead of being made to take effect at different periods, for the inducement to accumulate stock to await the operation of the additional tax to be collected after the first of February still continues; and if the prospect of a market shall warrant an early resumption of distillation, the business will be stimulated into activity for a short period, accompanied by a full flow of revenue, to be followed by a corresponding period of languor and depression, and a revenue proportionably diminished. This inevitable effect of irregular taxation might be avoided by imposing the two-dollar tax at once, instead of allowing it to stand postponed for sixty days longer. But on the whole I submit, it would be as well that it be understood by the country that the expression of the will of Congress on the subject in the last act be accepted as final, and that no suggestion be made inviting further legislation affecting the rate of this particular tax. How far the production of spirits may be influenced by the increase of duty cannot be positively affirmed. We have yet no experience, which enables us to form a satisfactory opinion. The annual yield of our distilleries has been about one hundred millions of gallons, of which full ninety-four millions are consumed at home. Though substitutes may be found for the commodity in some of its uses, experience in other countries has proved that the rate of duty, unless far beyond the highest prescribed by our law, does not seriously affect consumption. There is no article made that constitutes a fairer subject of excise, and there is none that will produce so much revenue with so little suffering to the tax-payer. If the law shall remain untouched as to the rate of tax, we may reasonably expect to realize, within the remaining seven months of the current fiscal year, not less than forty millions of dollars from spirits, and in the course of the next year that sum will probably be doubled. However extravagant this estimate may now appear, I have no doubt that it will be sustained by the result. All that appears to be needed to render it almost certain is a few additional means for securing the collection of the tax on the whole product of the distilleries, and thus protecting the revenue against illicit distillation to which high duties afford so strong a temptation. I am happy in being able to say that I believe such means may now, with the consent of Congress, be placed within reach of the government by the adoption of a newly invented meter, so ingeniously contrived as to indicate to a revenue officer the quantity and proof of the liquid that passes over the still, beyond the power of the distiller to control or vary the certain result.

The amount of tax collected during the month of October was, as I have already stated, only $13,625,350 04. The falling off of the revenue in that month is to be attributed to a previous depression of several important branches of business, and to the almost total suspension of the distillation of spirits since July. The receipts are below the monthly average, independently of the tax on spirits. Under usual conditions, that average ought to be not less than $15 000,000.

The sum realized during the past four months of the current fiscal year, without the tax on circulation and deposits paid by the national banks, is $61,727,738 99, and from all sources $61,892,200 20. Our receipts in November, influenced by the same causes as those in October, are, like them, still below the average. They amount to $13,146,688 97. The sum of $75,038,889 17 may be considered as the product of the new law operating under the disadvantage of greatly diminished production, arising from a large accumulation of commodities manufactured in advance of the increased duties. The next seven months cannot well fail to yield in the aggregate, exclusive of the tax on spirits and the five per cent. assessed on the incomes of 1863, $115,000,000. The income tax, as already shown, will yield $35,000,000, and spirits $40, 000, 000. According to this estimate, our revenue from excise will be about $265,000,000 for the year ending on the 30th day of June next, without a change in the rate of duties prescribed by the existing law. This result may be somewhat improved by judicious alterations in some of the administrative provisions of the late act, by which the modes of proceeding may be made more simple, uniform and consistent, unnecessary hindrances to trade removed, annoyances to honest tax-payers obviated, and the loop-holes by which subjects of tax escape the grasp of the revenue officers effectually closed. By the aid of such alterations, without any material increase of duties, the capacity of the present system to produce revenue, under a firm, vigilant, and vigorous administration of it, will, I am satisfied, unless untoward events shall intervene, be equal to all that its framers expected of it. For the year ending on the 30th of June, 1866, it will yield full $300,000,000. The product for the present year, as I have already shown, will fall $35,000,000 short of that sum. For the balance of the $300,000,000 demanded by your arrangements, resort must be had to additional taxes by way of excise, or to other expedients. The deficiency, whatever it be, may as a temporary expedient be supplied by a tax on sales. This tax, indeed, could not be properly added as a permanent supplement to our present scheme of taxation. If adopted as a fixed policy, justice would seem to require some changes in the present excise to harmonize it with this addition and equalize the burdens. Yet, for supplying immediate and pressing wants, it has advantages over any other plan hitherto proposed. I can find none which promises such a large yield of revenue, with so little disturbance to trade, and so slight a pressure upon the tax-payer. "Every tax," says Adam Smith, "ought to be levied at the time and in the manner in which it is most likely to be convenient for the contributor to pay it." When it is made payable out of money received and at the time of receiving it, the burden is most easily and most willingly borne. The seller adds the tax to the price, and thus anticipates the claim of the government; and the purchaser, when he buys to sell, is reimbursed by the consumer, who assumes the burden as a voluntary act, and proportions the weight to his ability to support it. It is also recommended by the facility with which its basis may be ascertained, and its freedom from the perplexing and complicated inquiries to which income and profits are necessarily subjected. If it was conveniently practicable that the whole burden of the duty should be placed on the last sales, it would be more consistent with policy and principle; as by such means the consumer, who is the final paymaster, would be brought into near connexion with the receiver, and the commodity taxed would be relieved from the weight of the taxes increased by interest for the delay of reimbursement. But such a plan, however desirable theoretically, is not practically possible. There is no means of determining in all cases when the final sale to the consumer takes place.

By an estimate based on the consumption of the country, and made a year ago, it appeared to me that the annual sales of articles in the States and Territories subject to the internal revenue laws might be fairly set down as somewhat exceeding in value ten thousand millions of dollars. The New York Chamber of Commerce, in a memorial to Congress, dated April 24, 1862, estimated the amount of annual sales of goods and merchandise of all kinds in the United States at eleven thousand five hundred millions. I am informed by Dr. William Elder, of the Treasury Department, whom I esteem good authority for any statement relating to national statistics, that the production for the year 1860 amounted to three thousand eight hundred millions of dollars. This was for the whole Union, the calculations being based upon the census returns of that year. The National Almanac for 1864 states that the production of the loyal States in taxable articles in 1863 was three thousand seven hundred millions in the prices of 1860. The transit of agricultural productions from the producer to the consumer is usually much more direct than that of manufactured articles. Large quantities of grain, hay, pork, and beef are consumed without sale, and the surplus may be sold once, twice, or thrice, while textile fabrics are sold five, six, or seven times before being consumed. It has been assumed by competent calculators, that, on a general average, productions of the country are sold four times, and that three-fourths may be supposed to enter the market. By proceeding in this way our result will be that the amount of sales of merchandise and product in a year will be about eleven thousand millions, on which a tax of one-half of one per cent. will produce fifty-five millions of dollars. No addition has been made in consequence of the progressive increase in production, which has been steady and constant notwithstanding the war, and which, there is every reason to believe, will continue in an accelerating ratio, unless checked by financial difficulties. The tendency of the tax will be to diminish the number of sales, and this may be set off against the opposite tendency, arising from increasing production.

A tax on sales made by wholesale and retail dealers, by wholesale dealers in liquor, and by commercial brokers, is already levied by the present excise law. If all sales of merchandise shall be made taxable, the sums being paid by those classes of traders in the shape of license fees should be credited to them, that a double tax may not be imposed. A tax of one-half of one per cent. on the sales of merchandise, produce, and other articles of traffic, except real estate, stocks, securities for money, coin, and bullion, already provided for, to go into operation in time to embrace the transactions of January next, and to continue for one year, will supply, within the current fiscal year, the greater part of what will be needed to make up the total yield of excise to the three hundred millions required, and within the calendar year will, under conditions of trade and business ordinarily favorable, produce the whole balance and a surplus sufficient to secure the treasury against the recurrence, at the end of the fiscal year of 1865–'66, of a deficit similar to that for which it is necessary now to provide. Within the next six months the disturbing influences of the recent sudden and violent changes of rates in the excise will cease to be felt, and, if further changes be avoided, the current of revenue will have risen to its proper volume. No further need of expedients to bring up the total of the excise duties to three hundred millions of dollars is apprehended. I am clearly of the opinion that the tax on sales here suggested is greatly preferable to a supplementary duty on incomes. It is also preferable to a direct tax, which, being payable out of capital and not out of profits, is justly regarded as objectionable, and to be avoided if consistent with the stability of the public credit.

It is evidently advisable that whatever changes may be made in the present excise laws, they shall leave the frame-work of the system untouched, and shall be restricted to the object mainly of simplifying the mode of administration. Yet there are some provisions relating to the rates of taxation that require change. This is especially true of the rule prescribed for assessing the duty on cigars. By the late act of Congress the valuation of cigars, as subjects of tax, shall in all cases be the value of the cigars, exclusive of the tax. The tax on cigars valued over $5 per thousand, and not over $15 per thousand, is $8 per thousand; on cigars valued over $15 per thousand, and not over $30 per thousand, $15 per thousand; on cigars valued over $30 per thousand, and not over $45 per thousand, $25 per thousand; on cigars over $45 per thousand, $40 per thousand. It requires but little consideration to understand that, under those provisions, no schedule of values derived from actual sales can be devised which, in a majority of cases, will satisfy the requirements of the law. This must necessarily be so, since determinate values cannot be found for two unknown quantities in a single equation.

Take the case, for illustration, of a thousand cigars selling for twelve dollars, The sale ascertains the value, and the question is, What is the tax? It must be either three dollars or eight. If it is three dollars, then the cigars, exclusive of the tax, are worth nine dollars. But cigars valued over five dollars per thousand, exclusive of the tax, must pay eight dollars. Then put on the tax of eight dollars, and the value of the cigars we find to be four dollars, and it will not, therefore, bear the eight dollars tax. Neither tax is appropriate to the value—one is too little and the other is too great. The same difficulty obtains in relation to cigars selling at any price between eight and thirteen dollars, between twenty-two and thirty dollars, and between seventy and eighty-five dollars. The law furnishes no rule by which they shall be assessed, yet the assistant assessor must assess them. In doubtful cases, officers of the revenue must adopt that interpretation which imposes the lowest duty. A schedule of rates was therefore prepared, which, if it did not exact of the tax-payer all that the framers of the act contemplated, reconciled contradictions, furnished a safe, practical rule, and as nearly as possible carried out the purposes of the act. All other taxes than those on cigars being levied by the express provisions of the act on the value, as indicated by the sales, no reason is conceived why a rule so convenient, and of such easy application, should be abandoned in relation to this commodity.

Another result of this mode of taxation is, that it is more profitable for a manufacturer to sell his cigars at eleven dollars per thousand than at fifteen, at twenty-five dollars than at thirty-one, at sixty-nine than at eighty-five, and at eighty-four than at ninety-eight dollars. The sale's value is the basis of the specific tax, and the return of the maker is practically the assessor's evidence of value. The temptation to understate returns is evidently great; much greater than it would be if the amount of the tax followed all the gradations of value. A change in this part of the law seems to be imperatively demanded, and I suggest that if the tax on tobacco is to be laid, as heretofore, on the manufactured article, and not upon the leaf, it will be eligible to adopt an ad valorem scale. But it appears to me a question well worthy consideration, whether it be not advisable to tax the whole tobacco product in the leaf. By the adoption of such a measure, frauds can be more readily guarded against than now, and the annoyances to which the manufacturer is necessarily subjected, by any efficient scheme of assessment and collection, will be obviated.

Apprehensions of difficulty in assessing tax on the leaf have been entertained, but I think, without cause. Tobacco fields, even if the growers were disposed to concealment, could not readily escape the vigilance of assistant assessors, and assessments could be made of the product as it passed from their hands with much more facility and thoroughness than at any time afterwards. In England, according to the report of the commissioners of inland revenue, the duty on hops, which was made payable by the hop-grower, was, of all others, "the most easily collected, and in which frauds and evasions were the most rare." Our experience here as to tobacco would, I am persuaded, be similar to that of England in the article of hops, if the tax was laid on the grower; and much of the demoralization created by fraudulent contrivances to escape the tax, and of the expenditure necessarily incurred in efforts to detect and punish the perpetrators, would be avoided. A light duty on the leaf, accompanied by an ad valorem duty reduced below the present rates, would answer a good purpose, and by lessening the temptation to evasion would facilitate collections. Either measure would be an improvement upon the present law. I may add that there is a general concurrence of opinion among collectors and assessors in these views. In country districts, where tobacco is grown and manufactured into cigars by men of small capital, and the manufactured article sold in parcels of a few hundred, or less, the provision for stamping cigars is not productive of sufficient advantage to compensate for the trouble it gives to assistant assessors, and the additional expense it occasions to the government. A retail dealer must, of course, destroy the stamp when he breaks the packages, and, in his hands, the want of a stamp is no evidence of fraudulent acquisition.

By the excise act of 1862 a duty of three cents and one-half per ton was laid on mineral coals. This was not a large tax, and, of itself, could produce but little effect on the course of trade, but, added to the expense of transportation, and the high price of the commodity in the market, it appears to have encouraged the importation of coal from Nova Scotia, whence, under the provision of the reciprocity treaty, it comes free of duty. In 1860–'61 the amount of coal imported from that province was but 204,420 tons, valued at $702,165, while in 1862–'63 it has risen to 282,767 tons, valued at $757,048, and in 1863–'64 to about 500,000 tons, worth more than $2,500,000. The present tax of five cents will operate somewhat more decidedly in the same direction. If the impost laid on coal by the late act to increase duty on imports was made to apply to coal imported from the British Provinces, as it would on a recision of the treaty, it would secure the market to our own producers, and add to the revenue of the government.

The export of Indian corn to Canada during the last three years, according to the tables of exports of foreign and domestic commerce, communicated by the Secretary of the Treasury to Congress, under the act of March 12, 1864, appears to have been as follows:

In 1860–'61	1,891,740 bushels, valued at	$810,346 00
In 1861–'62	3,218,438 bushels, valued at	1,010,243 00
In 1862–'63	4,211,897 bushels, valued at	1,622,825 00

This large amount, it is certain, was not needed for consumption in Canada, but for manufacture; for that country produces grain abundantly, and during the last year, while we exported the great quantity of corn already stated, we imported thence 806,153 barrels of flour. The corn was, it is presumed, for the most part, converted into spirits. It is difficult to conjecture what else became of it, and the business of distilling is known to be prosecuted there with much activity. The provincial excise duty being lower than ours, and the opportunities for illicit traffic being great, it can hardly be doubted that no inconsiderable portion of the product of Canadian distillation, the material for which was the growth of our own soil, crossed the line without paying duty, and was sold in our markets. Now that the excise on spirits in the United States is ten times greater than that imposed in the adjoining provinces, the stimulus to this manufacture, beyond the border, and to contraband importation, will operate with increased power. The information we receive from private sources gives point to this suggestion.

Under the reciprocity treaty the export of leaf tobacco to Canada has largely increased, while that of manufactured tobacco has proportionately declined.

In 1855 we exported thither leaf worth	$69,779 00
In 1860 we exported thither leaf worth	124,115 00
In 1863 we exported thither leaf worth	1,237,840 00
Of manufactured tobacco we exported to Canada in 1859–'60, in value	1,205,684 00
In 1860–'61, in value	683,875 00
In 1862–'63, in value	76,026 00

It is apparent that, although before the treaty we manufactured largely of this staple for the people of Canada, they now manufacture it for themselves. It is scarcely doubtful that considerable quantities of manufactured tobacco, as of distilled spirits, find their way across the border. The facilities for transportation across a long and imperfectly guarded frontier are so great, and the temptation afforded by our high excise is so strong, that we may reasonably suspect a profitable trade to be driven, in fraud of the revenue. Sir Martin Peto, writing on the tobacco tax, says: "The smuggling of tobacco not only appears, in fact, to form a distinct kind of trade, but to be an occasional occupation of the great bulk of the sea-faring population of our seaports." This evidence of British experience is admonitory, and suggests precautionary means. Were the excise on distilled spirits, manufactured tobacco, and cigars as severe beyond as on this side of the Canadian line, there would be no temptation to smuggle these articles. The recision of the reciprocity treaty would probably be quickly followed by an import duty on the tobacco that now enters Canada free. The effect would be to check the illicit border traffic, by which some hundreds of thousands of dollars are, doubtless, now lost to the revenue, and this government would be at liberty to place a proper impost duty on the coal from Nova Scotia, which, at present, pays us no duty, and competes to advantage with the productions of our mines which do.

By the late act, assayers of gold and silver are obliged to pay a license fee, varying from one hundred to five hundred dollars, according to the value of metals assayed; and a duty of one-half of one per centum ad valorem is laid on the product of the assay. It is worthy of consideration whether some change may not be made in the law relating to this subject, to the advantage equally of the producers of gold and silver, and of the government. Among the several suggestions that have been presented, none occur to me as more eligible than those which propose that the business of assaying shall be done at offices established by the government, wherever needed, and by officers appointed for the purpose. To this end the license fee may be raised to such a sum as to be virtually prohibitory to all assaying on private account. The offices ought to be sufficiently numerous, and so located as to accommodate conveniently the mining population. Perhaps the government might purchase the bullion at a discount only sufficient to constitute a reasonable tax. On receiving it the assay officer might be authorized to issue certificates representing its value, less the cost of assay, the expense of the transportation, and the tax, and payable in coin at the mint in San Francisco or Philadelphia. The owner of the metal would be furnished with a representative, at once, of the value of his deposit, capable of being converted into coin at the option of the holder, and the convenience of having its value in a form in which it would be capable of transportation with little risk or cost, and of being easily negotiated, would be an inducement to him to make the government his depository. Miners, who now frequently dispose of their crude gains at a large discount, might thus be afforded an opportunity of converting their unassayed product into negotiable securities, and the government would also profit by the arrangement. Perhaps, too, such an arrangement might exert a wholesome influence in tending to check the exportation of unassayed gold bullion, of which some $40,000,000 in value have gone to England within a year.

I had the honor, last year, to suggest a duty on petroleum. A duty of twenty cents per gallon is now imposed on the refined product. Representations have been made, which I deem worthy of consideration, that it would be eligible to tax the oil in its crude state as well as when refined; and I have no doubt the revenue would be benefited by the measure, even if attended with a reduction of the present duty. I am persuaded that petroleum will bear a tax of two, or even three cents per gallon, without benefit of drawback, and no sensible injury accrue to our export trade, and that the tax on the refined being reduced to fourteen or fifteen cents, the yield of the crude and refined together would considerably exceed the sum now realized from the refined alone. The revenue would gain by the increased home consumption of the refined article, as well as by the duty on the crude, and the tendency of the present tax to destroy small distilleries, and to throw the business into the hands of large operators, would be modified.

Among the provisions of the late excise act that seem to require some modification, are those which relate to the tax on printed books, magazines, reviews, and similar publications, on which a tax of five per cent. ad valorem is imposed. The tax, according to the 94th section, is "to be paid by the manufacturer or producer," but no rule is given by which the manufacturer or producer is to be determined; and it is often a point of no small difficulty to decide who, of the several persons engaged in the book-making process, is to be held responsible for the product. The variety of contracts and arrangements among the persons engaged in this very important branch of production is so great, and their relations so diversified, that they are themselves not agreed who should make the required returns, and assessors do not decide similar cases alike. Sometimes the printing is done by one party and the binding by another, under a contract with the publisher, who furnishes paper to the printer, and pays the binder for the binding. Sometimes one firm finds the materials and prints the book on contract with the publisher. Again, the publisher furnishes materials to the binder and receives the completed work from his hands for sale. Sometimes a publishing house, having its only place of business in one city, procures its printing and binding to be done in other cities, under various arrangements with the owners of plates and copyrights, and with printers and binders, having different kinds of contracts for every book they publish.

Amidst the perplexities which are occasioned by complications of this kind, and through which assistant assessors are not always able to see their way, it is not a subject of surprise that assessable duties sometimes escape assessment. The law would be simplified by laying the tax on the press-work and binding, with a provision that the printer and binder, when manufacturing on contract for an author or publisher, should take license and make returns as manufacturers, and pay the tax on the amount of their charges for printing and binding, and that they might collect and receive the amount of tax from the author, publisher, proprietor, or other person contracting for the work. Or if the publisher or person for whom the book is produced should be made liable to assessment, the same purpose would be answered, especially if it should be made the province of the assessor or the commissioner on appeal to determine finally the fact of liability.

In order to maintain the revenue derived from manufactures it is necessary that their permanence should be secured, and, wherever endangered, protected. The present tax on iron produced in the United States, in the complete forms of railroad and bar iron, will amount, when the coal consumed is taken into the account, to about seven dollars per ton; while other taxes which indirectly fall upon this production, as on the products of labor, on supplies, and on capital employed, will raise the actual tax to one or two dollars per ton more. During the two fiscal years preceding the last, little railroad iron was imported; but in the year ending in June, 1864, a rapid increase in such importation began, and nearly one hundred and twenty thousand tons, valued at four million eight hundred thousand dollars, were imported. This is equal to about half the entire quantity made in the United States, which is approximately stated at two hundred and eighty thousand tons.

It has now become certain that the whole demand for railroad iron can be supplied by American mills. The amount required for the repairs of existing railroads is about one hundred and fifteen thousand tons, and that for extensions does not usually exceed a hundred and sixty thousand tons more. The aggregate is far within the limit of the productive capacity of our mills. Such being the case, it is a grave question whether the conditions which invite heavy importations for an article which gives employment so largely to our own skill and capital, do not demand legislative action in support of the interests of the internal revenue system, especially in view of the diminution of the home production which they indicate.

Many collateral sources of revenue are created or augmented by this domestic manufacture, and must rise or decline with it. Altogether, the direct and indirect receipts of the government are not materially less, per ton, from iron made in the United States than those derived from the tariff on iron imported, while there are other and urgent considerations which now induce the government to cherish every branch of domestic industry, and sustain it against foreign competition. In 1861 the duty on imported rails was twelve dollars per gross ton. In 1863 it was increased to thirteen dollars and fifty cents per ton, coincident with an imposition of an excise duty of one dollar and fifty cents per ton on domestic rails. In 1864 the customs duty was reduced to thirteen dollars and forty-four cents per gross ton, while the excise duty was increased, as already stated. The American manufacturer is now suffering from the reduction of the customs duty, and although he is not yet vitally injured, he owes his protection less to the sufficiency of that duty than to the differences between currency and gold and the high rate of exchange.

The best test of the yearly income derived from real estate is its rental value. A rule requiring such income to be assessed on that value would be conveniently practicable, and would obviate the necessity of the vexatious inquisition now required in ascertaining the comparative value of live stock at different periods of the year, the amount of butter, beef, mutton, pork, cheese, wool, hay, grain, and other products sold, or on hand. Estimates of these must needs be very unequal, and returns incomplete, so that the burden of the tax is unequally distributed. I am unable to see why a man who consumes his income should not be taxed for it as well as one who saves it, nor why one who lives in his own house should not be taxed on its rental value, as much as if he let it to another and put the rent in his purse. If it be deemed right to allow an occupant of his own homestead such a portion of its rental value unassessed as would suffice to pay the rent of a moderate dwelling, the excess of the annual value of such homestead above that sum might, with justice, be taxed. An allowance of three hundred, or, perhaps, of four hundred dollars, might not be unreasonable; and, to the same amount, the deduction to be allowed to a lessee of real estate for rent actually paid ought to be fixed, so that owners and renters should enjoy equal privileges under the law.

Efforts have been made to procure such a distribution of stamps as will bring them within the reach of all that may need to use them; and I think that the experience of the office fully warrants the statement, that a judicious enlargement of Schedule B, to embrace instruments of evidence not described in it, would be preferable to any other mode of taxation equally fruitful of revenue. The harmony of the system seems, indeed, to require a readjustment of this schedule by some slight alterations in its requirements as well as in its extension to new objects. A slight inspection discloses the fact that some instruments are made to demand stamps of considerable value, while others of an analogous character are not required to be stamped at all.

The want of a summary and inexpensive process for the recovery of small penalties, and for procuring judgment of forfeiture of small lots of contraband goods seized by collectors, is much complained of. Provisions for such cases can be made by enlarging the powers of the United States commissioners appointed by the circuit courts, so as to confer upon them jurisdiction in all cases relating to the revenue, when the sum in controversy does not exceed three hundred dollars. In contested cases, right of trial by jury may be secured by providing for an appeal to the United States district court of the district. It is not the policy of the government to multiply suits, but it often happens that offenders deserving punishment escape the visitation of penalties prescribed by the statute, because the course of proceedings is too dilatory to be exemplary, and too expensive to be profitable to the government.

In order to relieve importers of the articles described in Schedule C from the necessity of affixing stamps to the bottles, boxes, or parcels contained in each package in which they were exported before disposing of them by wholesale, it was provided in the 169th section that when any such imported articles shall be sold in the original or unbroken packages in which the bottles or other enclosures were packed by the manufacturer, the person so selling said articles shall not be subject to any penalty for want of the proper stamps. But for this provision every importer would have been obliged to break each original package, and stamp every particular parcel contained in it, before he could have legally sold it, even to a wholesale dealer. Manufacturers of friction matches, in Canada and New Brunswick, have abused the privilege thus allowed them, and have made up packages of their wares, in convenient sizes, for sale by retail, and they are sold, unbroken, to the consumer. The impost duty on friction matches is too inconsiderable to protect the domestic manufacture, which is thus threatened with destruction by this sharp device. An increase of the import duty, so as to make it superior to the excise, accompanied by a provision aimed at this particular abuse, making it severely penal to sell the imported article in unbroken packages, without stamps, will afford a remedy. Lest, however, the manufacturers of other articles named in the schedule may follow the example of the foreign friction-match makers, and thus pervert the liberality of the law to fraudulent purposes, the repeal of the proviso is recommended.

The provisions for the removal of goods under transportation bonds and for warehousing for exportation operate advantageously, and seem to afford general satisfaction. It appears to me that those provisions may be eligibly extended to other products than spirits, oil, and tobacco. There is little risk of fraud in the exportation of dutiable merchandise from bonded warehouses under existing regulations, while, in the matter of drawbacks, it is very difficult, with the utmost exertion of vigilance, to guard the treasury against dishonest claims; and I am of the opinion that the government is often defrauded into repayment of duties alleged to have been paid on goods exported, on evidence so skilfully manufactured as to be difficult of detection.

Suits are sometimes instituted to recover money paid under protest to collectors on assessments, and payments are frequently made under protest to collectors without being followed by suits. It is recommended as expedient that a period of limitation be assigned by statute within which the right of action shall be asserted. There seems to be no good reason why a party having a claim against the government should not pursue it within a reasonable time, and it is certainly important to collectors who have relinquished office that their responsibilities should be determined, and their accounts with the government closed without unnecessary delay. I suggest that the period of limitation ought not to be longer than one year from the day of payment of the duty to the collector.

The provisions of the existing law, with regard to the time and manner of making returns by tax-payers, are such as seriously to complicate the accounts in the offices of assessors and collectors, and, in many cases, to put the tax-payers to much inconvenience. It is important that the merely formal portions of the internal revenue system shall be simple and uniform, so that the tax-payer may understand his duty, and that the least possible time of the assessor and collector may be absorbed in attention to the forms or modes of procedure.

A reference to the time for making returns and the subsequent proceedings now required in assessments and collections will enable us to perceive the inconvenience and uselessness of much that is now contained in the statute.

And, first, with regard to the annual list. The 11th section of the act passed at the last session makes it the duty of any person liable to an annual tax to make return to the assistant assessor on or before the first Monday of May in each year. The following sections provide for a canvass of the district by the assistant assessor, and the completion of his list within thirty days. As the assistant assessor is not authorized to call upon any person to make returns before the first Monday in May, and as no penalty attaches except upon failure to make return within ten days after being notified, it follows that but few returns will be received by the assistant assessor before the tenth day of the month. The twenty days remaining are entirely insufficient for the careful examination of the returns and the preparation of the list, and I am not aware of a single instance where the list has been returned to the assessor within the thirty days prescribed by law. After the assessor receives his lists from the several assistants, he is required to advertise and hold appeals in each county in his district, and for this, and the necessary revision of the assessments which must be made by him, thirty days is generally found to be an insufficient time. The result is that the list can hardly be completed and delivered to the collector before the first of August. As the annual licenses are assessed upon this list, the effect is, that every business man in the country is forced to violate the law, and to incur the penalty of imprisonment imposed on all who fail to take a license, which is rendered impossible to procure for three months after their liability has commenced. This delay, which is necessarily incident to the proceedings prescribed by the statute, has been productive of much dissatisfaction, especially in the large cities, and it delays the payment to the government of large sums of money. I would recommend such a change in the law as shall obviate this objection. I also suggest that the formal holding of appeals, as required by the 19th section, be abolished, as experience has shown, in the completion of three annual assessments, that tax-payers scarcely ever avail themselves of the privilege. As a part of the direct tax law of 1861, from which it was transferred to the internal revenue law, the provision was doubtless important, as the assessor was engaged but a small portion of the year in the discharge of his duties, and it was fitting that a time should be publicly designated when he would receive appeals from the action of his subordinates. But as a part of the present system under which the assessor is constantly employed, and may at any time be found by a tax-payer, it has proved entirely useless, while it is the occasion of considerable expense and delay. But the provisions for the return of taxes not in the annual list are still more confused. As a general rule, those who are subject to an excise tax upon manufactures and productions must make return on or before the tenth day of the month, and all such taxes are returned to the collector, on a monthly list, by the twentieth of the month. The manufacturer of tobacco, snuff and cigars is required to make a weekly return every Wednesday. The distiller of spirits and coal-oil is required to make his return on the first, eleventh, and twenty-first of each month. The brewer is required to make return and to pay the tax within the first ten days of every month. For the duties on cotton and spirits of turpentine, immediate assessments are to be made whenever either article is brought from any insurrectionary district. The auctioneer makes his return and pays the tax upon his sales within the first ten days of the month, in the same manner as the brewer; while the broker may delay his returns of sales until the thirtieth, and his payment until the tenth of the succeeding month. The tax upon the gross receipts of railroads, steamboats, &c., is returned and paid at the same times as the tax upon brokers' sales. The lottery manager must make his return by the tenth and pay the tax by the twentieth of the month. The newspaper publisher must make return of his receipts from advertising on the first of the month, and pay the tax by the tenth, and this must be done quarterly.

To the confusion thus arising is added still further complexity from the different penalties attendant upon a non-compliance with the law. In some instances a failure to make return at the time specified in the statute renders a party liable to a penalty of fifty per centum, and in others to a penalty of two per centum, while in other instances a penalty attaches only upon failure to make return within ten days after the service of a notice to that effect. There is a similar variety in the conditions under which penalties attach upon failure to pay the duties at the proper time; in one case the liability accruing upon failure to pay on a day specified; at another only upon failure to pay for a certain time after demand, and in others the imposition of a penalty depending upon either or both delinquencies.

It is not to be expected that a system embracing so varied subjects of taxation, and extend ng over so wide and so diversified a country, should be perfect in its details, after having been in operation for so short a period. Its simplification and harmony must be the result of time and the persistent efforts of the officers charged with its administration in adapting it to the wants of the several classes of the community. The experience of this office, and the almost universal testimony of assessors and collectors, show that many of the provisions of the existing law are annoying to the tax-payers, while they do little or nothing for the protection of the government. From the inauguration of the internal revenue system until the month of July last, manufacturers of tobacco, snuff and cigars made their returns and paid their taxes monthly; and five months' trial of the present practice fails to show any benefit from the change. On the other hand, as it costs the small manufacturer the loss of nearly a whole day in each week, it adds an inducement to fraud, while it materially increases the labor of the officers of the government. In the large and sparsely settled country districts the collector cannot be expected to make the tour of his district more than once in each month, and in the city districts the assessor and collector must each employ a larger clerical force. The loss of revenue or the failure to collect the taxes upon these articles when such failure occurs is, in nearly every case, due to the fact that the liability is not detected by the assessor, or is placed at too low a rate.

The failure to collect the amount assessed is very rare. It has been the practice since the first passage of the law, indeed, to require tri-monthly returns from distillers of spirits and coal-oil, so that both officers and manufacturers have become familiar with the routine, and are therefore less annoyed than is the case with regard to tobacco. I do not hesitate to say, however, that the monthly collection of these duties would be much less expensive, and sufficiently secure for the government. In a large majority of instances distillers are possessed of abundaut means, and, in all cases, they are under heavy bonds to secure their compliance with the law. . Very little revenue has been lost to the government through the inability of the distiller to pay the duties, but much from false and fraudulent returns. The multiplication of returns in no way facilitates the detection of error, but makes it the more difficult, from the greater intricacy of the calculations.

I recommend such an amendment of the law as will require no tax-payer to make return oftener than once in each month.

In addition to what has been said above of the system of appeals in the preparation of the annual list, which has been adopted from the direct tax law of 1861, I would call attention to the radically different functions of the list under that law and under the present. By the act of 1861 a gross sum was imposed upon each State, and by means of the list the amount was apportioned among the several tax-payers. If any man was assessed for too heavy a tax, all others were released from their just share of the national burden; while, if any man's property was undervalued, an additional tax was imposed upon all other citizens of the same State; and if these irregularities were allowed to creep into the list, their subsequent correction was impracticable. It was, therefore, requisite that the fullest means should be provided for insuring the entire accuracy of the list before it was returned to the collector. Had the machinery of that law ever been called into operation, the holding of appeals would undoubtedly have proved useful. But, under the present internal revenue system, the annual list contains the taxes upon incomes, licenses, and articles enumerated in Schedule A—i. e., plate, carriages, &c. Here each assessment is independent of all others, and in no degree affected by the total of the list. If any error is discovered after the completion of the list, it can be readily corrected, as the tax to be paid by each is determined upon grounds relating to the particular case alone. I would therefore earnestly urge the repeal of so much of the law as requires the holding of formal appeals by the assessor; and if this is done, there will be no sufficient reason for continuing to require a separate list for the annual taxes.

The income tax and the tax upon enumerated articles are conveniently and appropriately assessed and collected at the same time; but the license tax is of an entirely different character, and is scarcely ever paid by the same person, at the same time with either of the others. As the law now requires these several taxes to be assessed simultaneously, it is generally necessary to appoint an additional number of assistant assessors for the months of May and June, and thus much of the work is done by officers of less experience than the regular corps of assistants, while the expense of assessment is increased. If the annual list is dispensed with, I would therefore suggest the propriety of making the taxes upon income and upon enumerated articles payable at a time different from that fixed for the tax upon licenses. The license tax falls principally upon the business carried on in the large cities, and in the most populous of these the yearly leases mostly terminate on the first of May. That date, therefore, which is the one now fixed by the statute, is especially appropriate for the assessment of the license tax. On the other hand, it is so customary for our wealthy citizens to spend the summer elsewhere than in their legal residences, that the collection of the taxes upon income and upon enumerated articles would be much facilitated by an earlier assessment.

A careful study of the whole subject, aided by the suggestions of revenue officers in all parts of the country, has led me to the conclusion that the return of income and of articles in Schedule A should be made on or before the tenth day of March; the application for license, on or before the tenth day of May; and that all other taxes, except those which are paid directly to this office, should be returned monthly, and on or before the tenth day of each month. If this is done, and if all taxes are made payable on or before the last day of the month in which the return is required, the result will be a great simplification of accounts, and a considerable reduction in the expense of assessment and collection.

The rights of the tax-payer being secured by a statute designation of the time for the return and the payment of the tax, the mode and time for the completion of the list being a mere matter of account between the assessor and the collector, may be left to be determined by regulation of this office.

As the law now stands, any person who neglects to make return for ten days after being notified so to do is liable to be assessed with a penalty of fifty per centum of the amount of the tax. This is a salutary provision, and I would by no means advise its repeal; but I would call especial attention to its insufficiency, as a remedy, and the consequent unfairness in its practical application. He who manages to escape the eyes of the assessor at the proper time may avoid the payment of the tax perhaps for months, and when his delinquency is discovered, if he responds promptly to the call of the assessor, no penalty can be inflicted. I would therefore retain the penalty of fifty per centum in the case of refusal or neglect to make return, after being duly notified so to do; and I would recommend a further penalty, not exceeding four per centum of the amount of the tax, for each month for which a return shall be delayed beyond the time prescribed by law.

In considering what modifications of existing provisions it is proper to suggest, I have studiously abstained from venturing upon any subject which would affect the integrity of the system of taxation as prescribed by the late act of Congress. I have regarded that system as permanently established, and assume that no changes in its principles or its general arrangement would be desirable. The suggestions which I have ventured to make are such as I deemed proper, to give effect to the general purposes of the act, and to render more perfect and complete, in the combination of the parts, what has been so wisely designed as a whole. As has already been experienced, no radical changes can be made without prejudice to the revenue, dislocation of present arrangements, inconvenience to the assessing and collecting officers, and irritating and vexatious annoyance to tax-payers. Particular provisions, however, may be modified without serious detriment to any interest, and propositions for such modifications are entitled to favor where directed to the end of producing harmony in the operations of the machinery of the law, and simplifying the modes of proceeding, so as to be easily comprehended by their subjects as well as their administrators.

In reviewing the late act, some inconsistencies are discovered which it will be advisable to remove, and some omissions appear which it will be well to supply. I will notice a few of these, to which I invite particular attention.

By section 94, it is enacted that "there shall be levied, collected, and paid on all uncompounded chemical productions, not otherwise provided for, a duty of five per centum ad valorem."

By section 165, after imposing certain penalties, it is provided "that nothing in this act contained shall apply to any uncompounded medical drug or chemical," &c. The contradiction would be removed by substituting "section" for "act," in the proviso to the last mentioned section, and a consistency of intention preserved.

The 160th section directs that no stamp duty shall be required on certificates of the measurement or weight of wood, coal, or other articles.

In schedule B, stamp duties are laid "on measurers' returns, if for a quantity not exceeding one thousand bushels, twenty-five cents."

The 105th section imposes a duty upon the gross receipts of premiums by insurance companies, and directs that, in the account or return to be rendered, they shall state the amount insured, renewed, or continued, the gross amount of premiums received and assessments collected, and the duties by law accruing thereon, for the quarter then next preceding, while, in section 109, the gross amount of the receipts of insurance companies is required to be rendered within twenty days of the end of each and every month, "for the month next preceding." The proper correction will be made by striking from the 105th section the words "for the quarter then next preceding."

Sections 41 and 179 are not consistent as to the disposition to be made of penalties. If the words "who, if a collector or deputy collector," were stricken from the last section, the inconsistency would be removed. In cases in which the cause of action is confessed by the delinquent party, and the penalty paid without suit, it is recommended that where more than one person claims a moiety as informer the right may be determined by the commissioner.

Section 74 provides for the seizure of the horse and wagon or pack of a peddlar omitting or refusing to exhibit his license on demand, but confers no authority to dispose of the property seized.

In section 79, in the first paragraph, the obvious meaning would be expressed by striking out the clause "carrying on such business in copartnership," and inserting in its place "may carry on business in copartnership and."

In section 38, reference to section 35 should be section 36.

In section 81, the reference to section 73 should be to section 74.

In section 84, the reference to section 84 should be to section 85.

In section 109, the reference to section 102 should be to section 103.

In section 125, near the end, the word "and" should be "any."

In section 158, the word "effected" should be "affected."

In section 135, the word "extension" should be "extinction."

Section 119 provides for the collection of income by distraint and sale of stocks, securities and evidences of debt, if need be; but there is no distinct provision for distraint for any other tax. Such a provision might be inserted in section 28, and made to apply to the collection of taxes of whatever description; and in order to render the provision for distraint of securities effective, the officers of all corporations should be required to exhibit their books, when called upon by a collector or deputy collector.

I may be permitted here to request your attention to a subject relating to the internal economy of this office, in which some reform seems to be demanded. I allude to the inadequacy of the salaries now paid to my subordinates. The deputy commissioner, cashier of internal revenue, chief clerk, and the heads of several divisions, as those which have charge of general correspondence, of the correspondence on manufactures, of the claims for drawbacks, of the proceedings relating to detective operations, and of claims for abatement of taxes erroneously assessed, hold offices of great labor and responsibility. For many of these gentlemen there are no office hours, save as limited by necessary rest. I take pleasure in testifying to the faithfulness and self-sacrifice with which their duties are generally performed. Justice to them requires that their salaries be increased, so as to be more nearly commensurate with their services than at present. I venture to suggest that an addition to those of the deputy commissioner and cashier of one thousand dollars would leave their compensation below that usually allowed by private corporations for services of a similar character. Several of the heads of divisions fully earn, according to any reasonable standard for the valuation of their labors, not less than twenty-four hundred dollars, and a provision which should authorize you to make an allowance of that sum to clerks of the highest class in this office, and of increased compensation to others, would, I am satisfied, inure to the benefit of the government. A number of valuable clerks have resigned their places during the past year in consequence of the insufficiency of their salaries for their support.

The aim of Congress in imposing duties on foreign imports, and on domestic productions, is to support the national credit. During a great war the excess of expenditure over income imperils this credit, in a degree greater or less, according to the extent and probable duration of such excess, and to the untouched resources of the country. The financial policy of the government must be to reduce the excess, and it is commonly thought to be well, if possible, to remove it altogether, and meet each year's expenditure by its own revenue. But this policy is often impracticable, and may be abandoned without danger wherever a nation is young and rapidly growing—when each year multiplies the fruitfulness of the preceding, yet is but an earnest of greater prosperity to come.

The necessity for a permanent system of internal taxes in the United States may be best understood by supposing the war ended, the currency restored to a normal basis, and the business of the country again flowing in peaceful and regular channels. The annual outlay to be met by taxation will then consist of the sums needed for the support of the several departments of the government, and for the payment of the interest of the public debt, with perhaps a small surplus to be used for the redemption of a portion of the principal. For example, if we suppose our war ended, leaving us a debt of four thousand millions of dollars, and an annual expenditure fifty per cent. greater than of the years preceding the war, yet our present tax laws would yield us enough to pay the current expenses of the nation, including interest at six per cent. on the whole debt, and would leave a surplus which would extinguish the debt in about ninety years. Taking into account our prospective increase in production and population, the result would be accomplished in half the time.

This taxation is cheerfully endured by a patriotic people during the great struggle for the nation's life; but, on every reasonable theory of the future, it is far beyond all probable needs, and may, with safety, be considerably reduced when the war is ended. Our present debt is but a moiety of that on which our estimate is based; and even this includes a large amount—some twenty per cent. of itself—on which no interest is paid, nor need be, perhaps, for years to come. If, therefore, the war should end at this time or within a few months, the present rates of taxation might be very largely reduced, and still yield enough to afford every possible guaranty to the creditors of the nation.

Your obedient servant,

JOSEPH J. LEWIS,
Commissioner.

Hon. WM. P. FESSENDEN,
Secretary of the Treasury.
