We understand your constituent's concern regarding the proper tax treatment of its and its desire to pay the proper amount of employment taxes. Thus, we are providing additional information which explains the tax laws and also explains what tax consequences may follow if changes its federal tax reporting with respect to its . We hope the following is helpful to you and your constituent.

As explained below, the tax laws impose employment taxes on employers and employees. The tax laws provide relief from employment taxes for a business that did not treat a worker as an employee when certain criteria are met. If the business continues to meet the criteria, despite other changes in the working arrangement, the relief continues. If the business fails to meet the criteria for a tax period, the relief ends.

Definition of Employee and Imposition of Employment Taxes

The tax laws define an employee as any individual who, under the usual common law rules for determining the employer-employee relationship, has the status of employee. We determine whether a worker is an independent contractor or an employee under the common law rules by considering all of the facts and circumstances of each individual case. (Sections 3121(d), 3306(i), and 3401(c) of the Internal Revenue Code (the Code), relating to the Federal Insurance Contributions Act (FICA), the Federal Unemployment Tax Act (FUTA), and income tax withholding, respectively.) Guides for determining employment status are found in three substantially similar sections of the Employment Tax Regulations (the Regulations): sections 31.3121(d)-1, 31.3306(i)-1, and 31.3401(c)-1.

Generally, the relationship of employer and employee exists when the person for whom the worker performs the services has the right to control and direct not only as to the results of that person's work, but also as to the details and means by which he or she accomplishes the result. (Section 31.3121(d)-1(c)(2) of the Regulations.) Publication 15-A, Employer's Supplemental Tax Guide, found at www.irs.gov (<http://www.irs.gov/pub/irs-pdf/p15a.pdf>), explains this further. I am enclosing a copy for your convenience.

Generally, an employer must withhold, deposit, report, and pay employment taxes, including federal income tax withholding, FICA tax, and FUTA tax on wages it pays to employees.

Employment Tax Relief for Taxpayers Under Section 530 of the Revenue Act of 1978

If a business has a reasonable basis for not treating a worker as an employee, the law provides relief for that business from having to pay employment taxes with respect to that worker under section 530 of the Revenue Act of 1978. A reasonable basis for not treating a worker as an employee could be that the business:

- Reasonably relied on a court case about federal taxes or an IRS ruling issued to the business
- Underwent an IRS audit at a time when the business treated similar workers as other than employees and the IRS did not reclassify those workers as employees
- Treated the worker as other than an employee because of knowledge that a significant segment of the same industry treated similar workers as other than employees
- Relied on some other reasonable basis, such as the advice of an accountant who knew the facts about the business

In addition, the business must not have treated the worker, or any similar workers, as employees. Finally, the business must have filed all required federal tax returns (including information returns) for the worker for the period consistent with the worker not being an employee. For example, if the business treated the worker as an independent contractor, the business must have filed required Forms 1099 for the worker.

If a business meets the requirements of section 530, the business is relieved from having to pay employment taxes regardless of whether the worker or workers in question may be employees.

Revenue Procedure 85-18, 1985-1 C.B. 518, is a revenue procedure issued by the IRS to provide instructions for implementing the provisions of section 530 of the Revenue Act of 1978. I am enclosing a copy for your convenience.

Section 3.02 of Rev. Proc. 85-18, provides that for any period after December 31, 1978, the relief under section 530 will not apply, even if the taxpayer has met the "safe haven" rules (outlined above), if the appropriate Forms 1099 have not been timely filed with respect to the workers involved.

Section 3.03 of Rev. Proc. 85-18 provides that in determining whether a taxpayer did not "treat" an individual as an employee for any period within the meaning of section 530, the following guidelines should be followed:

(A) The withholding of income tax or FICA tax from an individual's wages is "treatment" of the individual as an employee, whether or not the tax is paid over to the Government.

(B) Except as otherwise provided in Rev. Proc. 85-18, the filing of an employment tax return (including Form 940 (Employer's Annual Federal Unemployment Tax Return), Form 941 (Employer's Quarterly Federal Tax Return), and Form W-2 (Wage and Tax Statement)) for a period with respect to an individual, whether or not tax was withheld from the individual, is "treatment" of the individual as an employee for that period.

Thus, if a business files a Form W-2 with respect to a worker for a tax period, the business has treated the worker as an employee and section 530 relief will not apply.

Although in the federal employment tax area, section 530 of the Revenue Act of 1978 provides relief for taxpayers that qualify from having to pay employment taxes or file Forms W-2 with respect to workers that may be employees, the rules do not explicitly address employers who qualify for relief under section 530. Constituent's IRS Private Letter Ruling

In IRS private letter ruling, we explained that a significant percentage of activities and conduct is regulated by . The ruling says that asked for certain revisions in agreement to satisfy requirement that the functions be performed by persons classified as common law employees. In response to request for revisions to the agreement, revised the agreement to add provisions--

- (1) that will exercise control and responsible management supervision over the conduct and activity in -related activity, including regular and ongoing reviews of the performance.
- (2) that will pay the operating expenses incurred with respect to -related activity, including furniture, office rent, overhead charges, and office supplies.
- (3) that the will personally perform all customary functions with respect to -related activity and the agrees not to contract with a third party for any of these functions.

As explained above, if a taxpayer has the right to direct and control the results as well as the details and the means of accomplishing the results of a person's work, then the relationship of employer and employee exists. If is the employer of the , then it would ordinarily be required to withhold, deposit, report, and pay employment taxes on compensation it pays to them.

private letter ruling from the IRS that concludes that the use of the revised agreement with the will not be considered treatment of the as employees within the meaning of section 530 and therefore will continue to qualify for relief under section 530 with respect to these workers as long as—

- (1) continues to timely file all the required federal tax returns (including information returns) consistent with its treatment of as not being employees;
- (2) continues to treat individuals holding substantially similar positions as not being employees;
- (3) does not withhold income tax or FICA tax from a or pay the employers share of FICA tax or the FUTA tax on behalf of a ; and
- (4) does not file federal Forms W-2, 940, and 941 with respect to the .

The IRS private letter ruling addresses only federal tax issues within the jurisdiction of the IRS. It does not address compliance with the new guidance. The private letter ruling remains in effect provided that is continuing to operate consistent with the facts set forth in the ruling. A change in these facts will mean that the private letter ruling is not binding on the IRS, and may no longer qualify for relief under section 530.

If a business has relief under section 530 for a class of workers and subsequently files a Form W-2 with respect to a worker in that class, this is considered treatment of the worker as an employee, with the result that the business no longer qualifies for relief under section 530 for the class of workers. Once relief under section 530 for a class of workers terminates, the business will be responsible for employment taxes with respect to workers in that class.
