Issue Number: 2026-2. Does your organization or association want a presentation by the Office of Professional Responsibility?

The IRS's Office of Professional Responsibility (OPR) plays a vital role in protecting the tax system through the administration and enforcement of standards for tax professionals who practice before the IRS. The OPR is strongly committed to education and outreach as a means of helping practitioners understand and comply with the requirements set forth in Circular 230, Regulations Governing Practice before the Internal Revenue Service.

The OPR regularly offers educational presentations to external organizations and professional associations on topics related to practitioner responsibility and ethical standards. Presentation topics may include Circular 230's rules and requirements, processes and procedures for administration and enforcement of those obligations, and common compliance issues or problems observed in practice. These sessions are designed to be informative, practical, and tailored to the needs and experience level of the audience.

Presentations may be delivered in a variety of formats, including virtual or in-person sessions, depending on attendance size and availability. Each presentation can be customized to address specific subject matters or areas of interest relevant to your organization's members.

To request a speaking engagement from the OPR, please contact your local IRS Stakeholder Liaison.
